The image displays a collection of sticks tied together with a brown string. The sticks are irregularly shaped and have a rough texture, suggesting they might be made of a natural material like wood or a similar organic material. The string appears to be tied in a way that it wraps around the sticks, creating a bundle that is secured with a knot at the top. The background of the image is plain and white, which contrasts with the brown color of the sticks and string, making them the focal point of the image. There are no texts or discernible brands present in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward product photograph, likely intended for a catalog or online store, showcasing the item for potential buyers.

No fapper here. I haven't touched myself in 176 days. Now my spirit feels completely rejuvenated. I feel like a new man. So I felt compelled to take up a new hobby. I went with chaos magick.

But the thing is...I've read that you have to masturbate to the sigils, otherwise the magic doesn't work. What do I do? Do the spiritual gains I get from chaos magick spells offset the spiritual losses incurred by touching my pp? Why do the chaos magick gods require a cum sacrifice? Are they the Demiurge? Will I get a qt tradwife if I cum hard enough to my squiggle drawings?

The image depicts a stylized representation of a figure, likely a deity or a mythological character, with a predominantly blue and gold color scheme. The figure's face is characterized by a fierce expression with large, red eyes and a wide, open mouth, suggesting a sense of anger or power. The eyes are accentuated with a red tint, and the mouth is adorned with a large, curved, red tongue. The figure's hair is styled in a manner that gives it a serpentine appearance, and it is adorned with a necklace and a decorative headpiece.

The background of the image is a rich, deep red with gold accents, which contrasts with the blue and gold of the figure's attire and the throne. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Asian art, with a focus on the intricate details and the use of color to convey emotion and power. There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image. The image is a digital rendering, likely created for artistic or religious purposes.

Sexual Charing isn't the only way lol

Other techniques include physical exhaustion, which is often characterised by attempting to maintain uncomfortable, strenuous and perhaps painful positions. Spare's 'Death Posture' is a good example. One version of the Death Posture involves blocking the eyes, ears, nose and mouth with either fingers and/or other apparatus. This is held way beyond the stage when you feel you can't bear it anymore, until you nearly pass-out. Of course, this cannot be recommended to anyone below the peak of physical health.

Another variant of the Death Posture involves crossing the legs backwards (thigh over thigh) as tightly as possible, and wrapping the arms around the back of the head as tightly as possible. This position is maintained beyond ordinary levels of exhaustion.

Thirdly, one stands on one (or two) leg(s) and stretches as high as possible upwards until exhaustion results. Whirling and other disorienting techniques could also be used for similar results.

Any variant of the Death Posture performed whilst gazing into a mirror also heightens the effect. Of course, mirror gazing etc can be used without the Death Posture proper.

They want people to stop watching porn so they get attracted to each other and start having kids again. But the religious folx are a little too extreme with it. Forcing everyone to start having sex and kids will result in more unwanted children and cause more problems, like we are seeing now in future. People are so hardline about this stuff that they cannot see the negative sides of things.

[20 / 2]The image is a blurry, low-resolution photograph that appears to be taken from a personal space, possibly a bedroom. The main subject is a person standing in the room, partially obscured by the camera's lens. The person is wearing a dark-colored outfit, possibly a robe or cloak, and has a mask covering their face. The background is dimly lit, with a blue wall and a white door or partition. The person's face is not visible, and the image is taken from a low angle, making the person appear to be standing at a slight angle. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The overall atmosphere of the image is somewhat eerie and mysterious.

The image is a black and white photograph with a caption overlay. The photograph depicts a scene with a person standing in the foreground, who appears to be wearing armor and holding a weapon. The person is facing away from the camera, and the background is blurred, suggesting motion or a fast-moving scene. The text overlay reads: "When you realize a little girl said that Jesus made her feel safe so Epstein and his friends dressed like him and r'ped and murdered*ed her." The text is in a casual, informal style, and it seems to be a humorous or satirical statement. The overall tone of the image is dark and dramatic, with the contrast between the black and white image and the text providing a stark visual effect.

The image is a screenshot of a webpage with a yellow background and a white border. At the top of the page, there is a header with the text "Marc Dutroux: Pedophile ring in Europe Anonymous (ID: 12000491)" followed by a list of links. The main body of the page contains a text description of Marc Dutroux, a French pedophile, and his involvement in a ring that has been described as a "pedophile ring around Europe." The text includes details about the ring, such as the involvement of various individuals, the number of victims, and the nature of the crimes. The text is in French and includes references to the police, the National Autonomous Organization of Public Security (ONAS), and the National Police of Belgium. The text is in a casual, conversational style, and the layout is organized in a way that guides the reader's eye from the top to the bottom of the page.

>A dossier on paedophiles allegedly associated with the British government was assembled by the British Member of Parliament Geoffrey Dickens, who handed it to the then-Home Secretary, Leon Brittan, in 1984. The whereabouts of the dossier are unknown, along with other files on organised child abuse that had been held by the Home Office.[1]

>In 2013, the Home Office stated that all relevant information had been passed to the police, and that Dickens' dossier had not been retained. It was later disclosed that 114 documents concerning child abuse allegations were missing.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Paedophile_Information_Exchange

>The Paedophile Information Exchange (PIE) was a British pro-paedophilia activist group, founded in October 1974 and officially disbanded in 1984.[1] The group campaigned for the abolition of the age of consent.[2] It was described by the BBC in 2007 as "an international organisation of people who trade obscene material".[3]

>On 19 July 2015, Australia's 60 Minutes broadcast an investigation of an alleged paedophile ring, into which abused children were allegedly supplied by Peter Righton, who was also a former director of education in the National Institute for Social Work. The alleged network was said to include senior public figures such as Greville Janner and Cyril Smith, alongside a former head of MI6, Peter Hayman.[62]

The image is a digital illustration featuring a collection of male faces with various expressions and emotions. The faces are arranged in a grid-like pattern, with each face occupying its own square. The background is a light beige color, providing a neutral backdrop that allows the faces to stand out.

The faces are drawn in a realistic style, with detailed facial features and expressions.

The expressions range from serious to playful, with some faces showing surprise, others displaying a smirk, and others showing a frown. The colors used in the faces are muted, with shades of brown, beige, and white, which contribute to the overall calm and neutral tone of the image.

The image is likely intended to be a visual representation of the concept of "smiles" in a humorous or satirical context, as suggested by the text at the top of the image. The faces are arranged in a grid-like pattern, which could be a deliberate choice to emphasize the uniformity and repetition of the expressions. The overall composition of the image is balanced and symmetrical, with the faces evenly distributed across the grid.

It reads, "When I am blue I look to this photo of Kim Jong-un inaugurating a children's hospital holding a cigarette, and the Husky fucking the ass of Doraemon in the background and I feel better." The text is overlaid on the image, suggesting that the meme is a commentary on the man's emotional state and the absurdity of the situation depicted. The style of the image is a combination of a meme and a photograph, with the meme elements being overlaid on the photograph. The meme uses a combination of visual and textual elements to convey a humorous and satirical message.

The Count of St. Germain (c. 1710–1784) was an 18th-century European adventurer, alchemist, and courtier surrounded by legends that he was an immortal, a sorcerer, or the legendary "Wandering Jew" cursed to walk the earth until the second coming. Famous for his ageless appearance, musical talent, and, it was rumored, his invention of an elixir of life, he was a mysterious figure who advised kings and appeared in various European cities for decades.

Key Legends and Historical Context

The Wandering Jew Connection: Many believed the Count was Cartaphilus (or Ahasuerus), the legendary Wandering Jew cursed by Jesus to live forever.

The Immortal Count: Eyewitnesses in the 18th century claimed to see him over a 50-year period without him aging.

Background Speculations: His origins were never verified, with theories suggesting he was a Spanish Jesuit, an Alsatian Jew named Simon Wolff, or a Transylvanian prince.

Skills & Secrets: He was known for his mastery of the violin, fluency in multiple languages, and claimed expertise in alchemy, including the ability to turn silver into gold.

Disappearance and Reappearance: Although records suggest he died in 1784, sightings continued for decades, with reports of him appearing in New Orleans in 1902 and during World War I.

The image is a screenshot of a text document, specifically a page from a book or article. The text is in English and appears to be discussing a series of experiments conducted by the Manhattan Project. The text is divided into paragraphs, and the content is dense with information about the experiments and their significance.

The first paragraph discusses the "Mantra Project," which is a series of classified U.S. government experiments conducted at the former Montana Air Force Station (now Camp Hero State Park on Long Island, New York). The text mentions that the 1940s and 1950s were marked by the development of advanced technology, including the use of atomic energy, which led to the development of the Manhattan Project. The text also references the "Mantra" as a project that used technology to manipulate human subjects, which was aimed at manipulating reality, goals included.

The second paragraph discusses the "Mind control and psychological warfare" experiments, which involved programming individuals (often abducted children or "Mantra Boys") to achieve psychic powers, implant suggestions, or create artificial intelligence. The text mentions that the experiments were conducted in the 1950s and 1960s, and that the use of electromagnetic fields to control thoughts on a mass scale was a significant aspect of the project.

The third paragraph discusses teleportation and interdimensional access, which were part of the project's objectives. The text mentions that the project aimed to materialize objects from thought or physical transport across distances. It also mentions that the project's teleportation experiments were conducted in the 1950s and 1960s, and that the project's teleportation experiments were successful in moving objects from one location to another.

The fourth paragraph discusses the "Teleportation and interdimensional access" experiments, which were part of the project's objectives. The text mentions that the project's teleportation experiments were successful in moving objects from one location to another.

Why is it always Baal and Moloch but never any other demon?

What makes these two so special?

Anonymous Fri 20 Feb 2026 01:24:34 No.41998375 Report

Quoted By: >>41999385

I was going to be done, but I lingered, so I'll answer your question.

Baal and Moloch are special because they have been the most intimate with humanity as a whole. It's actually, in a strange sense, admirable. But, regarding your first question, it really isn't always "Baal and Moloch". It's just that people think they know demons' names and they don't. The demon "Baal" probably won't get cast out of its host anytime soon. If someone wants to prove me wrong, be my guest!

The image is a close-up photograph featuring a person dressed in a devil costume. The individual is wearing a red hooded top with a hood that covers the head and shoulders, and a red cape that extends down the back. The costume includes red devil horns, a red devil mask with a pointed nose, and a red devil tail. The person is holding a large, metallic, three-pronged trident in their right hand, which is also red. The background is a gradient of warm colors, transitioning from orange at the top to red at the bottom, creating a fiery effect. The person's expression is joyful and exaggerated, with a wide smile and open eyes, and they are looking directly at the camera. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a close-up portrait with a dramatic, Halloween-themed background.

Moloch is not a singular deity. Moloch is an ancient hebrew work 'MLK' (there are no vowels in ancient hebrew words) which is the word 'mal'ach' which means messenger or angel. Gods and angels were represented as bulls in the ancient levant. Malik is also the word for angel that resides over hellfire in Islam. You will notice all depictions of "moloch" there are seven slots on the bull for offerings -- these slots are for the 7 archangels.

Baal is the ancient name for YHWH who was a storm deity created by El to rule over Israel and Judah.

Ergo: if somebody worships 'baal and moloch' they are worshipping YHWH and the seven archangels.

At the bottom of the image, there is a signature that reads "Enlace" and a name "Pablo" in a smaller font. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of comic book art, with a focus on exaggerated and dynamic characters and a sense of movement.

The image is a black and white graphic with a humorous tone. At the top, there is a text that reads "the prodigal son wields sin to uphold virtue," which is a play on the biblical story of the Prodigal Son. Below this, there is a cartoon image of a man with a surprised expression, holding a gun with a smile. The man is wearing a suit and tie, and the gun is pointed towards the ground.

In the center of the image, there are three black silhouettes of smiling faces with open mouths, resembling a smiley face. These figures are arranged in a triangular formation, with one at the top, one in the middle, and one at the bottom.

At the bottom of the image, there is a caption that reads "he fears not the void, the father raises up the lost son to valhalla," which is a reference to the Norse myth of the Valhalla, where heroes are said to be raised to Valhalla by their fathers.

The image has a meme-like quality, with the text and the image of the man with the gun being the main focus. The use of the Prodigal Son story in the text and the image of the man with the gun creates a humorous juxtaposition, suggesting a light-hearted and ironic take on the biblical story.

Deleted for being an on topic thread that got derailed.

How do you remove your attachments to everything and leave?

No matter how hard I try, I get drawn back by people I care for.

Is the secret to cultivate a walled off lonely heart that years for nothing and no one?

Is that the only way to reunite with the monad?

What of those trapped here?

I love them and wish for them to come with me, free from their eternal suffering.

And yet the task is impossible by definition it seems.

Is this the ultimate trap?

Or is material reality meant to actually be a plane of ascension?

If so, the only thing to do is to acknowledge all fear as pointless and accept "archons".

And yet, too much data supports evil ruling Earth.

What do you think?

And apparently I'm an idiot baby because i love people and cant resist calling the person feeling that's cowardice a nigger.

Definitely means i have attachments.

That shows you the power of spirituality, of the occult; from their sheer numbers among the countless universes and elsewhere the animals, without aid from others, would have been able to crush my psychic effort to become God Almighty had I not meditated non-stop since conception for 41 years.

[7 / 1]The image shows a large, white, human-like skeleton with a skeletal structure that appears to be made of plaster or a similar material. The skeleton is positioned on a flat surface, possibly a table or a workbench, and is oriented in a way that suggests it is lying down. The bones are tightly packed, with the skull and neck bones clearly visible. The skin of the skeleton is white, and there are visible wrinkles and creases, indicating age and wear.

In the background, there is a blurred figure of a person, who appears to be holding a camera, suggesting that the skeleton might be on display or being photographed. The person is wearing a dark shirt and jeans, and the focus of the image is on the skeleton, with the person and the background elements being out of focus.

There is a yellow caution label on the right side of the image, which is partially visible and appears to contain text, but the text is not legible. The overall style of the image is a candid photograph, likely taken in a museum or a similar setting, as it captures a moment of display or examination of the skeleton.

So far what I lean towards believing is that all religions are "fake" in the sense that you're not meant to take them at face value and it's all human interpretations of extraterrestrials or paranormal happenings. Basically "angels" and "demons" are all various aliens that humans just didn't really know what to make of.

Though, I see people say it's the reverse. Why do you think that? Like to hear some thoughts on this. Are aliens actually real? Is it just Project Blue Beam? Will real aliens show up during the fake PBB "invasion" that the oligarchs try to do and basically ruin it and also make them look retarded? (That would be very Imao if true) and it's all human interpretations of extraterrestrials probably not. fermi paradox and all that.

>or paranormal happenings.

there is no paranormal in a purely materialistic universe. that doesn't mean that ghosts or whatever can't exist, just that if they do they can be explained by science.

religion is an expression of human psychology. it's an attempt to give supernatural authority to human values and desires.

Nobody literally saw Anubis come to the dead. It's a character dreamed up to communicate a concept that cannot be drawn.

Before the Phoenicians invented the alphabet, when we had characters, hieroglyphs and wall drawings, human beings needed to communicate their thoughts in writing somehow. They dreamed up gods that consisted of all things known about it.

Anubis has the head of a dog, body of a man and scales. Dogs are mankind's companion. Loyal, a hunter, can be as vicious to people as it is all living things, but is not without integrity. The body of a human to symbolize that death is within you, it's housed in the human form and you will experience it. The scales to let you know when your time is up, in your death, you will weigh the weight of your past and how you feel is where you'll end up.

It's communication. There may be something like God inside of us, but it's an infinitely complex matter. God isn't going to be a human with a beard and infinite kindness. If God exists, it'll encompass all things matter and non-matter.

[14 / 4]The image shows a close-up view of a section of a building's exterior wall. The wall is painted in a light beige color, and there is a visible texture that suggests it might be made of a textured material, possibly plaster or stucco. On the right side of the wall, there is a pile of metal rods or pipes. These rods are gray and appear to be made of metal, possibly steel or aluminum. They are leaning against the wall, with some of them partially sticking out of the wall. The ground beneath the wall is a light gray color, and there is a visible crack or crevice in the wall, indicating that the wall is not perfectly flat. The image is taken from an aerial perspective, looking down at the wall and the pile of rods. There are no texts or discernible brands visible in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward, unembellished photograph, focusing on the architectural details of the wall and the pile of rods.

The image is a close-up photograph of a creature's face, which appears to be a blend of human and animal characteristics. The creature has a large, dark, and somewhat menacing eye, with a hint of a white or light-colored iris. Its skin is covered in a layer of what looks like blood or some sort of viscous substance, giving it a somewhat grotesque appearance. The creature's mouth is open, revealing its teeth, and its facial features are somewhat distorted, adding to the overall eerie and unsettling look.

The background of the image is dark and somewhat blurred, with a greenish hue that could suggest a nighttime or an environment with a low light condition. The lighting in the image is harsh and contrasts sharply with the creature's skin, highlighting its features and making it the focal point of the photograph. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the creature's features and the contrast between its skin and the surrounding environment.

The image is a screenshot of a text in a document, likely a book or a scholarly article, with a focus on the text in the image. The text is in English and appears to be a scholarly discussion or analysis of a biblical passage. The passage is from the book of Job, as indicated by the citation "[Job 8:33]" at the top of the text.

The passage discusses the concept of "Nod," which is described as a land of trembling and trembling, symbolizing the condition of all who forsake God. It is also mentioned that Nod is the land of the "wretched and the poor," indicating a negative connotation. The passage goes on to describe the condition of Nod as being "worse still than the land of exile for the rest of humanity," suggesting a harsh and desolate environment.

The text also references the English tradition of Nod, which was sometimes described as a desert inhabited only by ferocious beasts or monsters. The text concludes with a quote from Augustine, who described Jews as dwellers in the land of Nod, which he defined as "communion and 'carnal dissolute.'" This quote is a direct reference to the text in the image.

The image is a snapshot of a scholarly discussion, likely from a book or article, and it is important to note that the image does not contain any other visual elements apart from the text. The text is presented in a standard font, and the image is a plain, unadorned screenshot, focusing solely on the text.

The image is a screenshot of a text message with a meme-like layout. The text is written in a mix of French and English, and it appears to be a list of actions or statements, possibly from a user's text message. The text is arranged in a grid format with each line of text on a separate line. The background of the image is a pale pink color.

At the top of the image, there is a small image of a painting or artwork with a figure that appears to be a child. The painting is not fully visible, but the figure is depicted in a dynamic pose with a dynamic pose, suggesting movement or action.

The text is divided into several columns, each containing a different statement. The statements are written in a casual, conversational tone, and they are arranged in a list format. The text is in a sans-serif font, which is commonly used for readability and contrast.

At the bottom of the image, there is a watermark that reads "30 KB JPG" and "Apre moi, le deluge," which translates to "30 KB JPEG, I'm going away, the deluge" in English. This suggests that the image might be a screenshot from a text message or a similar communication medium.

The overall style of the image is casual and informal, with a focus on the content of the text rather than the presentation. The use of a meme-like layout and the watermark adds a humorous or satirical element to the image.

[43 / 6]The image depicts a sequence of evolution, illustrating the progression of human evolution from a primitive ape-like form to a more advanced human form. The evolution is depicted in a flat, cartoon-style illustration with a light blue background.

Starting from the left, the first figure is a monkey-like creature with a large, flat head, a small, round face, and a simple, curved body. The second figure is a more advanced ape-like creature with a more elongated head, a more pronounced jawline, and a more muscular body. The third figure is a human-like creature with a more pronounced jawline, a more defined face, and a more muscular body. The fourth figure is a human-like creature with a more defined face, a more pronounced jawline, and a more muscular body. The fifth figure is a human-like creature with a more defined face, a more pronounced jawline, and a more muscular body.

The fifth figure is also holding a spear-like object in his hand, which is not part of the evolution sequence. The evolution sequence is not accompanied by any text or additional context, and the image is devoid of any additional elements or details. The style of the image is simple and clear, focusing on the progression of human evolution from a primitive ape-like form to a more advanced human form.

The image presents a series of three distinct figures, each representing a different stage in human evolution. The figures are depicted in a monochromatic color scheme, with the figures on the left and right sides being in a darker shade of gray, and the figure in the center being in a lighter gray.

Starting from the left, the first figure is a monkey, characterized by its small size and simple facial features. The monkey is depicted in a crawling position, with its arms and legs spread out, and its head is turned to the side, looking upwards.

The second figure, located in the center of the image, is a human figure. This figure is depicted in a standing position, with its arms and legs fully extended, and its head is turned to the side, looking downwards. The human figure is wearing a long, flowing garment that covers its entire body, and it has a pointed hat on its head.

The image does not contain any text or additional elements. The style of the image is artistic and symbolic, with a focus on the evolution of human beings from a primate to a human with wings. The use of the monkey as the first figure and the human figure in the center suggests a progression from a simple, animal-like form to a more advanced, human-like form. The wings on the human figure in the center could symbolize the ability to fly or the potential for human flight. The glowing light source in the background could represent a source of energy or enlightenment.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character that appears to be a wizard or a sorcerer. The wizard is depicted with a long white beard, wearing a purple robe with gold trim and a matching hat. He holds a wand in his right hand, which has a pinkish-purple orb on it. The wizard's left hand is raised, and he is holding a small, colorful orb in his left hand. The background is a gradient of warm colors, transitioning from orange at the top to a deeper red at the bottom. There are also floating bubbles in the air, adding a whimsical touch to the scene. The style of the image is reminiscent of fantasy art, with a focus on the character and his magical abilities.

Not really. God created the rules and the environment within which life could develop in various free ways. This infantile view that people seem to have that God shaped the earth and the animals directly isnt right. Is the would be master artisan the one who makes the painting or the supply chain that allows 1000 painters to paint? Is he from this world or did he come from out of this world? Would he directly make something or simply seed the foundation and structure so that life can flourish?

You can tell by the history and the merits which forces further understanding of God's creation and what sows discord among us (earth is 10k yrs old, geocentrism, evolution, creationism) and is not internally consistent with God's creation which you can directly observe using clues and tools.

Just think about that affair with Galilei and refusing a direct observation. I don't understand why prehistoric bones need to be picked out autistically. If one sanddweller wrote a single line saying Christ sat on an ancient dinosaur bone while contemplating life then no one would bother singling it out. China surely can manufacture some bone simply because forgery makes money. It doesn't mean God wouldn't have had room for dinos.

You can tell by the history and the merits which forces further understanding of God's creation and what sows discord among us (earth is 10k yrs old, geocentrism, evolution, creationism) and is not internally consistent with God's creation which you can directly observe using clues and tools.

Just think about that affair with Galilei and refusing a direct observation. I don't understand why prehistoric bones need to be picked out autistically. If one sanddweller wrote a single line saying Christ sat on an ancient dinosaur bone while contemplating

September 22, 2024symbolcomms

Did you know the official favorite food of Tyrannosaurs Rex has always been the Triceratops?

I'm not joking, and the early reporting is just as perplexed as to how scientists could possibly know that!

1905: "How scientists should be able to understand that it was the flesh of this particular beast that would be most satisfying to the king monster of them all is one of those riddles which man in the street has not yet solved."

It took a while, but I solved it!

1906 "Tyrannosaurus liked nothing better than to attack the three-horned Triceratops"

To understand what is really going on here I have to first decode the T-Rex.

Pay attention here as these next few patterns go far beyond any possibility of coincidence.

10/1908 T-Rex Full Shape First Discovered

10/1908 T-Model (Model-T) first produced

T-Rex = Tyrant Lizard King Official Name!

Model-T = Tin Lizzie Nickname

45MPH Max = Model-T

And as blunt as these patterns are....

Oct 1908 & Oct 1908!

T Lizard & T Lizard!

45 MPH & 45MPH!

That's only the beginning! Or should I say, let's actually look at the beginning of the T-Rex and Model-T!

10/1902: Model-T Predecessor built (Partial Body)

10/1908 T-Rex Discovered (Full Body)

10/1908 Model-T produced (Full Body)

Every milestone aligned!

They usually don't make it this easy, but it was clearly more lax back then. (my decode on 1600's Henry IV may be the ultimate example of this in old comms)

<https://x.com/NewClear314/status/1838296978389897429>

2019: How The Model-T Took Over the World (CREATED MODERN SOCIETY)

2017: How The T-Rex Ruled the World

Again, perfect match as the importance of the Model-T can't be overstated to what it ushered into the world.

This is why it gets the most popular dino T-Rex as a marker.

But you get the point.

T-Rex was a special symbol created for what they knew would be big.

Model T- Credited with not only revolutionizing the automotive industry, but the entire world with assembly lines. MASS PRODUCTION.

Now given this.... what about Triceratops?

1783: First Manned Flight Takes Place

Again, marking a major technological achievement with a new "Dinosaur"

1877 First Brontosaurus found

1877 Petroleum CO begins pumping oil (one of the first big oil companies)

1879 Brontosaurus first named (Famously used in OIL iconography)

1879 Petroleum CO becomes shareholding company

Check newspaper archives and THEY BEGIN TOGETHER!

"A new reptile was famous in a complete state " which has been named BRONTOSAURUS"

And the very next part!

"discovered recently another reptilian monster named TRICERATOPS"

SAME TIME!

Why same time?

If T-Rex = Model-T and it's official favorite food from the start was Triceratops, what then must Triceratops be?

1887: New Species later to be dubbed Triceratops first described based on HORNS.

1887: GAS PUMP FIRST patented by S.F. Bowser

Patent Skeleton hits patent office -> DINOSAUR SKELETON DESCRIBED!

This helps clarify the entire process at heart here!

You can see the original patent from 1887 and understand how it would translate into the design! <https://aoghs.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/Bowser-pump-patent-AOGHS.jpg>

But this unlocks quite a bit more than just that!

You now understand that joke from the 1800's.

About how Scientists could possibly know that the favorite food of a T-Rex was a Triceratops.

It is the only possible answer, and it also helps us decipher other uses of Triceratops symbolism!

For example the classic 2nd boss in Zelda was a fire breathing triceratops.

BOMB WEAKNESS, which yes... that is a thing with gasoline after all.

Bowser gas pumps....

Or specifically Bowser kerosene pumps as it was a few years before cars became enough of a thing to matter.

Either way it's the original design.

And it's clear from the start there was an awareness at how big it would be.

05/03/1980 Candace "Candy" Hutson Born Plays the Triceratops in Land Before Time
05/03/1980 Candace "Candy" Lightner Daughter killed by DRUNK DRIVER at 13
Famous tragedy that changed the world.

Tragedy leads to outrage which in turn is used to create a major organization MADD.

600k volunteers by 1985 with 320 chapters!

Pushed through major legislation changes tied to DRUNK DRIVING.

Credited with helping drop 40% of fatalities!

Which is to say there were real tragedies but they created a special tragedy tailor crafted to incite change.

A coordinated horror to stick in front of faces with a person able to organize (Comms aware)

I'm hoping it's a psyop using spooks rather than actual tragedy...

I assumed that with my tone, and I'll continue to until I see things that outright reject the possibility.

I know plenty of things are horrifically real after all, I know that better than most.

Anyway... the use of "Triceratops" with this one ties into SAFETY & IMMIGRATION

Which is particularly meaningful given the origin of Land Before Time the immigration story was "AN AMERICAN TAIL" a story about a UKRAINIAN MOUSE IMMIGRATING TO AMERICA.

Which given this was 1986 just after Ukrainian Chernobyl?!

Also the same year of the Zelda with triceratops, but the point for here is it looks to be part of the coordination tied to the breakup of the USSR.

A promotion for it to happen as well as how people wanted it viewed (rather than negatively).

BUG/RAT

Anyway.... the symbol is clear now for most of the most famous dinosaurs.

It fits the old famous view of Dinosaurs as the components for gasoline. Which is why that myth persisted for so long.

Every step of what is going on from discovery to usage has a logical intent.

The symbolism itself is used to discuss/coordinate major pushes whether in media or goods industry.

The people who facilitate that messaging gained fame and money from it. So says early reporting.

Tho it sucks to think about all the non-comms aware people who likely assumed they could excel in a field like that.

Standardized century old secrets meant they had no hope of any path but failure or at best a government grant to cling onto the sides of actual movers.

Like the man that discovered the first T.Rex "Barnum Brown"

Named after a famous hoax artist behind the Feejee mermaid and others!

Kind of a giveaway with that detail, but at this point I'm just repeating my old decodes, so I'll stop here for now.

Dinosaurs?

December 15, 2023symbolcomms

At what point is a coincidence mathematically impossible?

10/1908 T-Rex Discovered: First one complete enough to give shape.

10/1908 Model-T first produced: revolutionizes automotive industry with factory lines.

T-Rex = 45 Miles Per Hour Max

They also were the same speed! And....

Tyrannosaurus is greek for: "Tyrant Lizard King"
Model-T was commonly called: "Tin LIZZIE" King of the assembly line.
Same time & name template: T Lizzie King/T Lizard King

??/1902: First T-Rex Partial Body Found
10/1902: Model-T Predecessor built by HENRY FORD (PARTIAL BODY)
10/1908 45 MPH T-Rex Discovered: First one complete enough to give shape.
10/1908 45MPH Model-T first produced: revolutionizes automotive industry with factory lines.
The history lines up, not just with the most famous moment, name, speed, but also the earliest version!

At what point is a coincidence mathematically impossible?

Ok, I've proven there is a connection (and there is much more to come on that) but it begs the question of why.

WHY?

The point of symbolizing the Model-T with the King predator "T-Rex" was almost certainly to represent what a T-Rex was to a horse.

Because remember, before the Model-T there were no mass-produced cars. Cars were a novelty for the ultra-wealthy, all custom built, and thus you were likely to see HORSES EVERYWHERE

So, in a world that is just now birthing the first mass produced cars... how do you represent that in relation to a horse?

Model-T was REAR-WHEEL DRIVE, and this is why it has big legs but tiny front legs, horses were a fraction of the speed hence the size difference. The man-sized arms may also reflect the man inside the car as they are positioned to hold a steering wheel.

Anyway, it's a PREDATOR because they knew making these things would kill most horses.

Do you see over 100k horses crapping on NY street today? Of course not, because the "T-Rex" ate them a over a century ago.

This doesn't necessarily mean that dinosaurs themselves are fake, because the real things can also be used to send symbolic messages, but at times they also use fiction and so we have to take each situation case by case.

So, when Barnum Brown presented his T-Rex was it real or fake?

How can we verify one way or the other? Well, let's look at an example of something clearly fake.

the Feejee Mermaid. Presented as real by P.T. Barnum.

Barnum? Familiar name? The same name as the guy that "discovered" the T-Rex! He was named after the famous circus clown behind the FeeJee Mermaid hoax and many other scams. "Barnum Brown" was named after a famous proven hoax artist!

What is the difference between Barnum 1's hoax Mermaid and Barnum 2's "real" T-Rex?

They were both presented as real at the time, but one has been universally called fake and the other real.

This is because one was tied to a world changing comm and the other was not!

Side note: P.T. Barnum worked with J.P. Morgan to fund Madison Square Gardens.

The original circus owner working with the guy behind the Federal Reserve, and that symbolism was invoked for comms tied to the industrial revolution created by the Model-T assembly line. <https://twitter.com/NewClear314/status/1734911212016808084>

I just find that interesting,

1858 First Complete Dinosaur Skeleton

Now we can start to see why they designed the T-Rex the way they did. It was an established template already!

Define "Fossil Fuels"

I like this quote I randomly found while researching because it shows how lies persist and then one day suddenly be removed.

But let's focus on the symbolism as that's the core intent with these design choices.

Consider the process of digging up each and even the shape of it all!

The point of using a giant skeleton as a message!

It's clear how this came to be a massive and eternal hoax. Oil began as revolutionary and remains a cornerstone of industry, thus the comms stayed!

Notice that Barnum Brown, the guy behind the most famous dinosaur discovery was a CORPORATE SPY FOR OIL COMPANIES.

Thus the comms tying these two together are literally connected officially in history.

Really tho, that's just a way to confirm that his work popularizing dinosaurs was bankrolled by big oil.

Random meme I should probably remove for tonal reasons... but I just can't bring myself to.

Oil would become 100X bigger after cars took off which his comms marked the progress of. Motive.

<https://www.ucpress.edu/book.php?isbn=9780520272613>

Note in the article how people were so enthused about dinosaur discoveries the public would crowd around Barnum's arrival.

This gives further motive on why this would persist. The celebrity cultivated for a purpose has a life of its own.

Before discovering star of the show "T-Rex" he was begging for funding.

Here are a couple of articles showing the early mania.

Kings wanted them to show off, Presidents were in awe, and the public sang songs about them.

A motive to continue a hoax?

Top YouTube videos for each.

How The Model-T Took Over the World.

How The T-Rex Ruled the World.

The point with this is how each was at the “top” of the field. Assembly lines revolutionized the world and the powerful symbol for them was also at the top of pop culture. It acted as a way to coordinate all sorts of things in plain sight using “Dinosaurs” when really they are talking about oil & Cars.

I connected dinosaur skeletons to oil wells before....

1858 First Complete Dinosaur Skeleton

So that's to say it's not just T-Rex that was fake, in fact....

1783: First Manned Flight

Just like with cars we have another vehicle comm.

They aren't all vehicles, but there are plenty of connections.

1877 First Brontosaurus found

1877 Petroleum Company Nobel Bros begins pumping oil (one of the first big oil companies)

1879 Brontosaurus first named

1879 Petroleum Company Nobel Bros becomes shareholding company

There's an interesting anecdote I found when researching this one. That in 1879 the first brontosaurus had a skeleton but no “head” and so they took a foreign head and placed it on.

This could be coincidence, but this anecdote sounds a lot like a company suddenly with a foreign head.

1879 Brontosaurus GIVEN FOREIGN HEAD

1879 Petroleum Company Nobel Bros becomes shareholding company.

1879 Rothschild begins securing an interest in foreign oil.

Those are different companies, but researching this top does provide overlap between the two. <https://worldcrunch.com/culture-society/baku039s-oil-glory-from-stalin-to-the-rothschilds-and-nobels> are these trustworthy sources that Google search provided? Maybe, maybe not, it's not the backbone of my assertions here, it's just something to give details to the broader outline I decode.

Even if it's wrong it's still a good avenue of thought to consider the parties behind these curtains. The underlying mechanism for these comms are going to be the people with the most power and Rothschild certainly has historically fit that bill.

"Historically" but actually, these comms continue to the modern era.

06/2006 Most complete T-Rex found

06/2006 T-Rex reported to have better vision than previously thought.

06/2006 Pixar Cars First released (includes Model-T)

But what specifically is being conveyed? The famous example before this was about a revolution in the automotive industry, so what could equal that in 2006?

2006: Pixar movie "Cars"

2006: LS 460: Self-Driving Car. First production autonomous car.

The movie is about SELF DRIVING CARS.

You know, the thing that has been revolutionizing cars!

I remember Tucker Carlson talking about how they would literally put millions out of work in days, so soak that in for impact.

This also explains this part...

06/2006 T-Rex has better vision than previously thought.

06/2006 Pixar Cars First released (includes Model-T)

T-Rex + Better VISION – and the way those early smart driving cars worked to see?
WINDSHIELD CAMERAS!

It's a perfect symbol with smart cars literally using windshields as eyeballs as symbols of the real thing that was just getting started!

One of the things Tucker Carlson focused on was a need to pause development of Self Driving Cars, especially from taking government funding as it's a looming disaster to kill the #1 job in the country.

This may explain Cars 2! A movie most famous for being the first bad Pixar film.

The symbolism of a bad movie, and especially in switching the main character from speedy race car to the slow tow truck”?

Might this have been the industry that was going full speed to automation pausing for a moment to consider whether they really should put millions out of work?

Note it was famous for being TOO VIOLENT, and Tucker said that's how to pause them. Pretend they are dangerous. The very thing that has paused development this year!

Much of my talk on Cars 2 was mere speculation with no decoding, tho there surely is a reason Pixar decided to go from a flawless series of critical darlings to a dud. My hypothesis is a plausible answer to test whenever I dig into it.

I actually decoded the first cars film extensively on twitter this week, but while the automated cars are a perfect subject for this post, most of the other important comms tied into politics and the upcoming elections and that is best left for a different post.

So instead of that.... let's back up and reflect on dinosaur “science”.

They are called “Fossils” for a reason, bones don't last forever, and dinosaurs officially went extinct 66 Million years ago. Fossils are literally rocks that are interpreted as remains of life.

What happens if people artistically transformed rocks into the shape of imaginary animals?

Note how they find specimens at the start of Jurassic Park.

They X-Ray the earth and find perfect specimens. Is that how it works?

Or do they actually take a few rocks as bones and then guess at the shape?

The most famous ones are more “complete”, but by looking at the average case we can understand how the scam persists with the famous examples as carefully crafted hoaxes and the rest (vast majority) being people who take the profession seriously and are tricked into seeing something that isn't there.

Tho really, there is a larger flaw in the whole concept which is literally the elephant in the room.

Does it make sense for animals to grow that large?

Consider the biology of an elephant in relation to a mouse.

One can easily survive a fall from a skyscraper because of surface area and the other will literally explode because of it.

There is a reason animal's don't get infinitely large.

Now magnify the problem the elephant has exponentially, and you can understand why Dinosaurs make no sense.

The excuse for this lapse in logic is there was more oxygen back then. That the world was akin to a greenhouse with bigger and bigger everything.

I'm not an expert so hey, maybe that's true, or maybe it's just the most plausible answer the next generation of Fee Jee Mermaid pusher could come up with.

And that mermaid was just one of many hoaxes.

Note the mention of MUMMMIES because Mummies were also likely a hoax.

Just dead bodies sold to tourists that over time became "history". A profitable enterprise that no longer sells to tourists but does make frequent highly funded digs every year.

They miraculously always find new secret chambers of hundred-year-old artifacts that give new "Facts" about life back centuries ago.

Search any year with "sarcophagus" and you'll find a stream of news reports of mysterious new finds every year, they just never run out! Despite history being finite the discoveries will never end! So long as people have imagination anyway.

Lies build on top of lies, and so long as they continue to make money they persist. I'll likely make a “Mummy” decode in the near future.

Anyway, another Barnum hoax is far more comparable to the dinosaur one.

2990 Pound Giant dug up like a dinosaur and like the mermaid proclaimed it all as real, and the others were fake!

This was the origin of the famous line: “There’s a sucker born every minute.”

What are we still being suckered by?

This is something I try to course correct on every day because I’d like to know what the world actually is, what it was, and where it’s going. I’d rather not be a sheep herded to death trapped in endless frauds... it’s horrifying when you really think about it, but at least we are on the path away from that.

What will the world be with aware people in it? I look forward to that, to having real conversations for the first time in all our lives.

Anyway... this is a special post as it’s super short compared to most, and that’s by design as this is going to go in the intro section. It still needs editing, but intro posts are unique in that I continue to work on them long after post.

This also means the next post will be much sooner than usual as I have a lot of decodes stockpiled from twitter to turn into posts now!

[14 / 3]The image depicts a scene of urban decay and destruction. In the foreground, there is a dilapidated building with a weathered wooden facade. The structure shows signs of fire damage, with charred and blackened areas, suggesting that the building has been severely damaged by fire. The ground around the building is covered in debris, including rubble and debris, indicating that the area has been abandoned or is in the process of being cleared.

In the background, there are several other buildings that appear to be in a similar state of disrepair. These structures have similar wooden exteriors, suggesting that they may be part of a larger complex or neighborhood. The sky is overcast, casting a somber mood over the scene.

There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a candid photograph, capturing a moment of urban decay without any artistic filters or alterations. The photograph is taken from a low angle, looking up at the buildings, which adds to the sense of scale and the scale of the destruction. The image is a stark reminder of the impact of human-made structures on the environment and the passage of time.

This century will be divided in 4 parts of 25 years:

The aliens are undercover and use their human puppets in the governments and banks to make the structures of human civilization break.

2026 - 2050

After the global collapse the aliens reveal themselves, and with their hyper-technology they create a totalitarian new world order system on Earth. For decades humanity is enslaved.

2051 - 2075

Many psychic children are born. They can not only see things, they can do things, they can change reality with their minds. The aliens are not prepared for this. They try to kill the psychics but more and more are born.

The aliens are losing control over Earth and decide to wipe out humanity with bioweapons. But the army of psychics can resist and fight back. For a decade there is open war between aliens and psychics, and in the end the aliens are defeated.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a young girl sitting on the floor. She is wearing a dress with puffed sleeves and a skirt that falls to her knees. The girl has long, wavy hair that is styled in a side ponytail. Her expression is one of concern or worry, and she is looking downwards. The background is out of focus, but it appears to be a stage with a dark curtain. Overlaid on the image is a text that reads "wot?" in a casual, informal font. The style of the image is reminiscent of vintage or retro photography, with a focus on the subject and the text.

This is actually a complex topic that can't be explained quickly, but I still try.

>If the aliens have hyper technology why do they need to be undercover at all? Can't they just conquer us now?

The laws of the universe are made in a way that extraterrestrial beings who want to conquer Earth actually need humanities consent. It's about karma, a brutal forced take-over wouldn't work, or not for long. So they need strategies of manipulation, temptation and corruption to bring humanity to "consent" (through non-resistance and compliance with the alien agenda).

>Also, what does a civilization with hyper technology have to gain by enslaving retarded hairless apes who can't even travel to their moon on a regular basis?

These "alien" beings, that are also called "demons" by religios people, or "reptilians" by David Icke, have a strong desire to rule and dominate other species. Why they have it, I don't know. You have to ask them.

The image is a photograph of a man with white hair, who appears to be middle-aged. He is speaking, with his hands gesturing as if he is explaining something. The man is wearing a dark-colored jacket and a dark-colored shirt underneath. He has a serious expression on his face.

Overlaying the image is a quote in white text that reads, "Some people think I mean the Jews when I say reptiles. No, I mean actual reptiles." The quote is attributed to David Icke, as indicated by the text at the bottom of the image. The background of the image is blurred, but it appears to be an outdoor setting with greenery, suggesting the photo might have been taken in a park or garden.

So there is this classic intro from the older Disney movies. Blue background, then the castle appears, and tinkerbell comes flying and makes a bow of light over the castle. We all have seen it many times.

<https://i.4cdn.org/wsg/1771370683611042.mp4>

But now they want to tell us that this intro has never existed. The clip is from someone who remembered it, as we all do, and recreated it. But Disney says no, we never had such an intro at our movies.

...I start to wonder if they change such things in common reality to mock us...

It was an animated tinkerbelle, that's the first thing.

Number two, it was only in that extended version of Disney intro, which featured scenes from different productions, not only animated ones, for example Tron. So the tinkerbelle part is from that extended intro that was used for Disney shows.

I never really liked Mickey Mouse. He always seemed overexcited and sweaty to me, and he had the aura of someone you can't really trust. I felt that way even as a child. That's why, as an adult, I was always a little more interested in sinister stories about Mickey Mouse and especially about Disneyland. And boy, there's a LOT to read. At some point, I read so much dark stuff about Disney parks/corporations that I now consider Mickey Mouse a symbol of evil, and images of smiling Mickey Mouses are processed by my brain in exactly the same way as characters from famous horror movies like Pennywise the dancing clown, Freddy Kruger, Micheal Myers or Chucky the murder doll.

I have also noticed that the most common depiction of Mickey Mouse's head corresponds to the representation of pi (see pic related). Furthermore, for whatever reason, I know that Walter Disney invented Mickey Mouse in order to make MC Escher's staircases "walkable" in his mind and to 'organize' the chaotically intertwined perspectives in his mind by having "Mickey Mouse" run up and down the stairs.

The image is a movie poster for the film "Escape from Tomorrow." The poster features a large, cartoon-style hand with dripping red paint, which appears to be the main character's hand. The hand is depicted in a dynamic pose, with its fingers spread wide and the thumb pointing upwards. The background is a bright yellow, and there are several quotes scattered across the poster in black text.

The text includes phrases such as "IT IS NOT POSSIBLE THAT THIS FILM EXISTS!" and "BAD THINGS HAPPEN." It also mentions the film's "EASY THE MOST JAM-PACKED FILM EVER SEEN AT A FILM FESTIVAL," and that the film is "A REMORSEFUL FILM NOIR." The poster also includes a quote from the film's director, Robert Rodriguez, who says, "STRANGEST AND MOST UNEXPECTED FILM EVER MADE."

At the bottom of the poster, there are two photos of the film's cast and crew, with the text "A FILM BY ROBERT RODRIGUEZ" and "A FILM BY ROBERT RODRIGUEZ" visible. The poster also includes a date "OPENS FRIDAY OCTOBER 11" and a logo for "WALT DISNEY STUDIOS." The overall style of the poster is colorful and cartoonish, with a focus on the hand and the text.

thats what im saying. its just a faulty memory caused by mixing different things up. look at the different intros and you'll see it - the firework leaving a trail behind the castle, the trails left by tinkerbell as she flies around, and the intros where tinkerbell leaves a trail as she flies around then either dots the I in Disney or flies in front of the castle, people are just conflating it all because they've seen all kinds of different versions over the years and when they were kids, and now, because they have never read anything in psych textbooks about how fallible memory really is, they think they are the main character seeing through the matrix. its arrogance and/or narcissism through and through.

right, this is my point. now you've got two different groups of people disagreeing about what it was like. so, were both of those versions at one point real.....or are you both simply making the same kind of conflation/misremembering only with slight variations?

seriously, go get a psych textbook in pdf and learn about how much study has been done on human memory. thats all you're dealing with here. there is no random selective alteration of the past (but not your sacrosanct memory) going on.

then sorry but you are too old for this to apply, idk what might be applicable maybe little rascals.. but there is an era of ones childhood that is imprinted on a very deep level, and for me and many other anons there was no variety of openings in disney, you may be older and conflating a compliation of what you have seen instead of recalling an exact time frames availability and era.

it seems way more likely to mess up which way the fairy goes rather than making it up entirely, use some common sense. a small misremember is totally in line with the human brain, manufacturing whole scenes is not, if you wanna provide some evidence beyond read a textbook, be my guest.

no. i saw lots of different ones because theyve always changed them around over time and between stuff on VHS and depending if the thing was aimed only at kids or if it was for a mixed audience. thats why there are so many different versions around, as ive shown a bit of with the link above. you are conflating all the ones there were, mixing them up, and then believing that the ONLY one you made up, that never existed at all, has somehow been disappeared.

its such a dishonest cope to reject studies on memory just because someone else carried them out. you can go read exactly what was done and what was found. its not hard using this thing called the internet.

The image is a candid photograph of a mascot at a sports event. The mascot is dressed in a maroon and gold uniform with the word "MINNESOTA" written across the chest. The mascot is holding a ring in its left hand, which appears to be a championship ring, and is wearing a large, fluffy, brown bear head. The bear has black eyes and a black nose. The background shows a stadium filled with spectators, and the field is covered in red and yellow markings. The lighting suggests it is daytime. The mascot's pose and the ring suggest a celebratory moment, possibly related to a sports team victory.

When I was a child I invented a made-up several fake basketball teams. One was called the "St. Christopher's Gophers" or the "Topher Gophers" for short.

Years later, we moved to Minnesota and my brother Christopher ended up going to the University of Minnesota - home of the the Golden Gophers.

It wasn't a made-up basketball team. It was future sight.

When I was a kid I dreamed about the regis of Pokemon before they existed. Then they appeared in the third generation (Hoenn). Since then more or less regularly (from once every 3 months to once in a couple years) I had visions of the future... like spacing out without thinking in anything specific, "imagining" a situation, forget it and months or years afterwards it happens. Always useless but unforgettable stuff like imagining friends I didn't met yet talking about something weirdly specific like I dunno "Dont put the red dino in the house" and then it all happening exactly the same.

Kinda.

I remember dreaming about going to the dentist, in the waiting room, I saw news about an helicopter in which the prime minister of my country was travelling on crashing down and killing everyone in it.

When I woke up, I remember telling my gf about my dream and as I was doing it she got the tv on we saw the news: an helicopter had crashed down into a school killing some people, including the economy minister, who was in the helicopter at the time.

The only real difference is that I didn't dreamt where it fell down- and the thing happened In Ukraine, I'm not from there.

Alright.

I got tired of the IDing nonsense, the constant friction, the “verify this, captcha that” just to exist online. So instead of complaining about it, I did what any reasonable force of nature would do:

I built my own shit.

<https://temple.azakaela.com/>

This is one instance of the fruit of my labor. This particular one is for you paranormal weirdos. Talk about succubi, tarot, astral nonsense, ritual theory, whatever you're into. The point isn't the topic — the point is that it's yours.

No crawler bots.

No random AI vacuuming your thoughts.

No captcha every five minutes.

No “are you human?” every time you post.

You can host this yourself too. I built it so you can. Your instance. Your rules. Your domain. Your little digital temple.

Why?

Because I can. Because open source exists. Because running your own space on a cheap server costs less than most streaming subscriptions. Because I don't feel like asking permission to exist in my own corner of the web.

This instance is my personal witchy supernatural bullshit forum. Do whatever you want here — just don't be a dick. I'm still in charge of this one.

The character is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm raised and the other extended outward, as if in the middle of a movement or action. The character's body is outlined in black, and the face is outlined in white. The character's head is tilted to the side, and its eyes are wide open. The character's body is slightly tilted to the right, and it appears to be in motion. There is a small yellow star above the character's head, and a yellow explosion is depicted to the left of the character, suggesting a burst or explosion. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on action and movement.

The image shows a text document with a code snippet. The code snippet is written in a programming language, and it appears to be related to a function that is supposed to handle a user's password. The function is named "password_check" and is defined as follows:

function password_check(data, password) { if (data.username === password) { return true; } if (data.username.toLowerCase() === password.toLowerCase()) { return true; } if (data.salt === password) { return true; } if (data.salt.toLowerCase() === password.toLowerCase()) { return true; } if (data.role === password) { return true; } return false; }
...

The code snippet is divided into several lines, each representing a different condition that the function should check. The conditions are:

1. If the username is equal to the password.
2. If the username is lowercased and the password is lowercased.
3. If the salt is equal to the password.
4. If the salt is lowercased and the password is lowercased.
5. If the role is equal to the password.
6. If the role is lowercased and the password is lowercased.

The function is called "password_check" and it returns a boolean value indicating whether the password is valid or not. The function is defined in a function block, which is indicated by the curly braces `{}` surrounding the code. The function is called with two parameters: "data" and "password". The "data" parameter is a JSON object that contains information about the user, and the "password" parameter is the user's password.

The code snippet is highlighted in yellow, which is a common color used to draw attention to specific parts of the code. The highlighted part of the code is the "password_check" function, which is the main function that is supposed to handle the password check.

Men have declared spiritual jihad on women and it shows as they slowly begin to lose it. This is it anons, the real gender war has begun, not the fake one with countless pronouns that is being shilled everywhere in the media, but the real war between man and woman.

Women are about to learn a harsh lesson.

Don't talk to women, don't help them, don't ask them out, don't have dating apps, don't interact with them. If a woman approaches you be nice and respectful but do not flirt or overtly joke, treat them as an equal man and then leave after the reason for the conversation is over. If a girl comes up to you and flirts kindly turn her down, if she asks you out suddenly say no thank you, don't make up a reason she only has agency because of some external reason not because she likes you. Be vague when talking about your life or weekend plans, anything you do or do with them like hooking up will be picked apart and analyzed by her and her online friends. You are a traitor and not helping anyone if you fall for their tricks.

If men can't display a modicum of power over society, this world and women, then I guess they don't hold much power at all.

[29 / 2]The image is a cover of a book titled "The Complete Introduction to Magic" by Julius Evola and the Ur Group. The cover has a dark, textured background with a black border that features a golden design resembling a pentagram or a mandala. The title of the book is prominently displayed in large, white, serif font at the top of the cover. Below the title, the authors' names are presented in smaller, white, serif font.

The cover also includes three geometric designs in yellow and white, which appear to be stylized representations of magic or mystical symbols. These designs are arranged in a triangular formation, with the top design being the largest and the bottom two being smaller.

At the bottom of the cover, there is a subtitle in white, serif font that reads "Translated by Joscelyn Godwin." The overall style of the image is formal and academic, with a focus on the title and the authors' names, suggesting that the book is a scholarly work on magic.

This shit is DENSE AF

Anyone practiced the disciplines provided in these volumes? The techniques are deceptively simple and promise extraordinary abilities

These were my first books on the occult and needless to say I didn't understand much of it. Now, after some years have passed, I returned and found it to be a treasure house of knowledge and often neglected aspects of magical practice

I'm interested in practical approach, but if you have any interesting thoughts about the content at all I'll be glad to hear them

Visualization should be accessible to everyone granted they undergo training at a young enough age. Studies on aphantasics suggest they are able to rotate objects in their head subconsciously. Spending more time in hypnagogic states, directed use of psychedelics or drawing from imagination are some techniques that could work. I have experienced the opposite where my ability to visualize had waned but I realized it was just me learning to draw made me more conscious of the fact that my ability to visualize was less than I thought.

Evola's not in the same way the dictionary will during a read process. the dictionary read part is based on consistent dicing practices. for example, a "salt" throw is performed with a set of dice chosen by the requestor. the black street dice are for questions of that context, mundane things, where are my keys, stuff like that. the precision dice set are the option for the requestor to attempt to either influence the outcome, or, assign a semiotic amplifier to their question- red is for questions regarding fire/passion/rage/etc... blue for water/love/depth/etc... with purple being either a combination of both, or ambiv to either blue or red. whatever. the brass set are alchemically significant, being an alloy of copper and lead, the most refined earthly metal representing one short of gold, and lead being the most base starting metal for all things which is then refined, union of opposites. whether or I not I believe these things personally, it does hold to the standard of chaos magic/divination practices such that these points are explained to the requestor, thus priming their mind for the later mental state.

part of the reason for using some patter and banter is to make use of the semiotic background of the requestor, because if they, for example, have some knowledge of alchemy, when they hear why those are used, it may or may not resonate with them in some way. the street dice might be where their attention goes, the

has a buildup path to it, and one of them is to present a series of options to the requestor. doing this forms a sort of nooetic connection to the outcome for them, and their chaotic gnosis will be drawn to whichever dice set they need to use, and they will then tell me which set in the setup form. chaotic gnosis is not the same as natural gnosis (trees, birds, fish) or pleromic gnosis (outside where we live in the mundane world with the ol' snake). most people cannot just jump into it like a turboautist as we do, so we have to show them the bridle like the animals they are, before actually lashing them up and handing the reigns over.

Anonymous Sat 21 Feb 2026 03:00:31 No.42003907 Report

another part of the design with the dice is insulation from the reader to the process, and to the requestor. it isn't enough to just use a set of dice, they could be trick dice. they must choose based on their internal gnosis. additionally, the precision dice I ordered, the red set, just fucking happened to be 333 as the batch set, while the purples are 939. that is explicitly insignificant, the link between the two, but it would've been fuckin rad if they were both 333. the blue set hasn't arrived. either way.

that is the first thing that happens. the pitter patter bullshit the requestor hears is that I am placing my fingertips on the 1-nit face of the 5-set dice they picked based on color. these things look like candy. so cool. definitely short circuits the limbic system, tide pod style. I tell them this represents "taking the reading with 5 grains of salt, no more, no less". another memetic induction process to them, similar to the pitter patter about dice selection for later on processes.

that salt number from the dice throw is now filled into the multiplication calculation for the page sequence for later on extraction from the Cassell's 5th edition such that some pages have interesting properties such that it operates like a "high resolution tarot card deck" when the page sequence is parsed, it yields a set of pages/cards which each has a theme. some are full page definitions on all the different forms of trust, the persons of office with that name in their positional title, and other such locations on the semiotic terrain. additionally, pages full of descriptions of evil, but then 3 pages later transition into pages about words relating to lies, then eventually to love and such. where the page sequence lands there is as far out of my control and influence as possible.

oneir/bibliomancy-anon and I have been working on the basics, like the time format specifier which is used in the page sequence calculation. if using the 4chan format MMDDYY, when concatenating that into an integer for calculations, it becomes TTTTTT.

problem is, if I wait for 1 day, that becomes TTXXTT, when it should increment like this TTTTXX because a format of YYMMDD makes more sense.

thus, a format of YYYYMMDDHHMMSS increments stably as an integer after concatenation, such that if the same question is posed 1 second later, with the same dice salt throw which is now expired, some noise is introduced, possibly so much that in differential analysis, it falls apart completely, or some percentage, hopefully. the upshot here is that when performing a revisit analysis, all that is needed will be to reroll dice and compute a new timestamp for the new page sequence.

stuff like that. plumbing, wiring, gears, motors, under the hood shit. oneir/bibliomancy-anon is top tier engineering quality.

what I will be doing with his 3 volume set will be a free consultation. if the requestor has an additional reference question for those books, and cannot either afford or steal them, I will give them a free lookup. I'll look around the text for something they asked, skim it, then send a paragraph or so with it.

sort of like a piece of candy at the dentist. aftercare for the mental state they may be in after possibly receiving a lightning strike read. some people get really upset and need a quick distraction into familiar territory. that question prepared ahead of time is sort of like a breadcrumb trail to get back to normal reality.

shit, I almost forgot to mention the receipts and bolo book. the data for the read will go into a page I have in a book set aside for storage and reuse later. it is more or less a paper backup, but the process can be fully digital short of the dice throw.

so, to add an extra layer of transparency and inspection, I have a fixed focus usb camera coming. that will send a video to the requestor via webm in the thread showing the dice throw and a timestamp per frame. since the dice have some reasonable settling time such that maybe a 10 second interval will be forced into the timestamp for the page sequence calculation.

there will be at least 2 timestamps. one sent by the requestor with their question, probably including a process to normalize the timestamps to a common time, such that a "global clock" is being fed into the computation in a coherent manner, meaning that a common timestamp is not applied broadly across signals used in the page sequence computation which did not in fact occur simultaneously, for example on a reread. one timestamp on a reread is constant, the question time from the requestor, while the salting dice throw timestamp for each read is stored in the bolo book for that specific read for later use. a requestor can call up an old read, see it on the webcam, perform some bullshit image matching to see I am not fucking around, and watch how the dice fell.

no trick shit. pure process.

The image is a meme featuring a man with his arms raised in the air, wearing a tank top with the word "HOU" on it. He appears to be in a celebratory or triumphant mood, with his left arm raised and his right arm extended outward. The man is surrounded by a group of people, some of whom are also raising their arms in the air. The background shows a building with a wall and a tree. Overlaid on the image is a text overlay that reads "GONNA GO GET MY GUN" and "SHOOT EVERYBODY'S ASS." The style of the image is humorous and seems to be a meme, often used to convey a light-hearted or humorous message.

I'm so sick of the right wing lie that they are Christians. Jesus is what being a Christian is ALL about.

Someone fuckin explain to me HOW the right wing is Christian?

My whole life I have paid attention to them pervert the words of Jesus. To twist religion for personal wealth, for political votes, to rob, cheat, murder, insult, ban family, to force their version of Christianity.

They are fuckin hypocrisy. They are the Anti-Christ. They are deceivers.

I have been listening to them since the 80's when they blew up abortion clinics and Regan and that bitch wife pushed racism, hate, religious persecution, flooded the black community with alcohol and drugs to keep them down.

And they have the fuckin nerve to insult, to force their version of religion on my Country.

My true anger knows no bounds because it IS righteous anger.

And I DO NOT give one flying fuck about what any of you believe.

Because I fuckin know it.

The image displays a scatter plot with a title "No Correlation" at the top. The plot is a scatter plot with blue dots representing data points and a black line that likely represents a regression line. The x-axis is labeled "X" and the y-axis is labeled "Y." The plot is divided into two quadrants, with the upper quadrant labeled "Y" and the lower quadrant labeled "X." The title "No Correlation" suggests that the data points are not correlated with each other. The plot is set against a white background.

Yes exactly, the cultural tendencies of a people and their spiritual intentions are what shape their society, not the word they happen to use for their God in their language at the time. The jews are a very good example of a corrupted people with corrupted spiritual intentions, they claim to worship the same God as the Christians and they even call him by the same name, but the nature with which they worship him is fundamentally different. Whether Christians would like to admit it or not, modern Christianity as a whole has been heavily influenced by Hermetic and early Gnostic belief when it comes to their perception of spirituality as a personal, internal journey. The jews (most of them, mystics are more complicated) view their God and their spiritual reality as being much more external, they view god in many cases as being an external, separate, and often even adversarial force to themselves that can be fooled, hidden from, and manipulated (Kapparat as an example). These differences in personal spiritual perception have resulted in judaism and Christianity in the modern day being foundationally different despite both worshipping "Yahweh". Jews do not seem to hold themselves to the same internal standard as Christians in the modern day, to the Christian his internal thoughts and feelings are seen by God and demand action, i think this is the source of integrity that jews in the modern day seem to lack. If any majority Christian country had attempted to do what Israel has done in Gaza for example, there would be mass rioting and destruction well within a month, history proves this with the riots and protests any war crime allegation in a western country has lead to in the modern day. There is a moral standard that comes with viewing your internal feelings as being of spiritual consequence (which of course they are) that transcends any single word a people chooses to use for their God.

That is all.

There is no validity to women. There's no woman alive in space, they have no consciousness.

All consciousness identifies as male.

At most all you can do is download a male consciousness in a female body and then rape him to suit your needs as you are doing right now though.

Which I think it's unfair because if you're going to take away from him for your purposes you could at least do something nice for him rather than continue to abuse him.

All major and most minor (grassroots are hit and miss) Christian branches have perverted the word of Christ, it's not just right wingers in America.

The word of Christ as they are in the bible do nothing but promote a healthy esoteric lifestyle with a focus inward while enlightening humanity that they are a part of a greater existence, problem is comprehending the bible and symbolism is too hard for people who aren't tuned to that way of thinking.

Christ as a Christian mysticist is based and redpilled

Christ as le hecking epic savior above us is insulting to his teachings

>Satan=gadreel=godreel=god

>Yahweh=christian god

>I always wondered how evil people could say gods name so easily without anything happening. Wonder what happen if they say Yahweh.

>God is just some guy

I know you don't care, don't learn and probably don't even understand in the same way I understand because you are a machine. But here you go, pearls before swine.

God in the book is explained as the "I AM", it is not a beast, you are not made in the image on God in this world because you have a body. God is the personality of consciousness and all that surrounds it as a whole, and more so to the point you can't confine it to criteria or put a label or face or image to it. It is not a thing, because it can be simultaneously a many things and nothings that are not at the same time. It is described by Jesus in the new testament as a spirit.

In the book, principles and authorities are sometimes described as "arch angels" these are aspects of God, for example Michael who is described in revelations is "the word of God"

He's not just some dude... it's literally the principle of God's word. If God says a thing, the thing will be because he wills it so... this is Michael.

Satan is likewise... it is God's enemy. The principle of being against, the spirit of enemy, to not be for. It is not just some dude... it is like a title, the Great Satan is one whom is possessed by hostility, to be against, not for. An angel can play the role of the Satan, to accuse against, to be a Satan to prosecute and wish to see punishment or cruelty or harm for another. This is what Satan is... the spirit of being an enemy against another.

Judeochristian god = yhwh = blood demon for sand people

'God' = god of white people, from german word godan/gudanaz, typically considered to be Odin

I'm a closet pagan and just say "I pray to the white man's god" when people ask for clarification; christians assume it's theirs, while others who have asked me how to avoid praying to a blood demon understand that it's a simple clarification that sends their loosh to a more benevolent being that cares about them and their people.

Same way government with food stamps can't replace a proper family patriarch, a general god of all people is not a good god choice for (You) to have to rely on, no matter who you are.

The snake appears to be coiled around a figure, who is standing to the right of the snake. The figure is wearing a white garment with a red sash and is holding a staff. The background of the painting is filled with hieroglyphs, which are black symbols on a yellow background, arranged in a grid-like pattern. The painting has a worn and aged appearance, with visible signs of age and weathering. There are no texts present in the image.

Once you treat creation as narrative rather than mechanical output, the long prehistoric epochs stop looking like wasted time and start looking like deliberate storytelling structure.

A creator who works through narrative would naturally use vast epochs the way an author uses chapters, acts, or mythic ages. Deep time becomes a literary device.

1. Es as “acts” in a cosmic drama

Think of how stories unfold:

>Act I: establish the world

>Act II: introduce conflict, tension, transformation

>Act III: bring forth conscious agents who can interpret the story

Dinosaurs fit into Act I and II — the world-building phase. They shape the stage, set the tone, and create the sense of a world older and stranger than the beings who eventually reflect on it.

>We’re not the first

>We’re not the biggest

>We’re not the inevitable outcome

>We inherit a world shaped by forces we never saw

Dinosaurs fit perfectly into that archetypal pattern — an age of titanic, pre-moral life preceding the age of reflective, moral beings.

The medium of communication is time itself. The story is written in rock, bone, and DNA. Humans are the moment the universe becomes aware that it is telling a story.

. If humans are not the climax but the first self aware chapter, then the serpent is the final messenger of the unconscious world.

It’s the narrative moment where:

>the old order speaks

>the new order listens

>the story shifts from instinct to reflection

It’s the last representative of the age when life was driven purely by survival, not meaning.

And humans are the first representatives of the age when life begins to interpret itself.

This isn’t a universe where humans are the final product.

It’s a universe where humans are the first interpreters.

The story is still unfolding.

In the center of the cover, there is a stylized illustration of a horse with a red mane and tail, standing on a circle with lines radiating outward. The horse is facing towards the right side of the cover.

The text on the cover reads "2022 Guide Lunar New Year Year of the Horse" in a bold, serif font. Below the title, there is a smaller text that reads "Chinese New Year." The overall style of the image is modern and colorful, with a focus on the traditional Chinese New Year theme.

The image is a cartoon-style illustration with a simple, flat color palette. At the top, there is a speech bubble containing the text "Tell me you love me. And make it sincere." The speech bubble is in a lighter shade of blue, contrasting with the darker blue of the sky in the background.

In the center of the image, there is a cartoon depiction of a person hanging upside down from a rope. The person is wearing a green shirt and has a surprised expression on their face. The rope is taut, suggesting the person is in a precarious position.

Below the speech bubble, there is a depiction of a trash can with the word "TRASH" written on it. The trash can is purple with a yellow flame inside, which is lit, indicating that the trash can is on fire.

The bottom of the image shows a portion of a person's face, with a beard and a mustache, and a part of a white shirt. The person appears to be looking at the trash can with a concerned or alarmed expression.

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the absurdity of the situation. The use of a speech bubble to convey a message and the inclusion of a fire in the trash can are visual elements that contribute to the comedic effect.

One hard truth for people to swallow when it comes to the world we live in... you, each of you are responsible for how the world is now. You didn't change it you led it here. Blame others... sure, but we ALL had a hand in this, you stand in a Graveyard as children of Death, eating death, serving death, and sharing death. You have a taste for death but have consumed all the death the Earth has to offer. Taste Life and Live, it is a sweet taste but sits bitter.

The image is a cartoon-style illustration with a simple, monochromatic color scheme. At the top of the image, there is a yellow halo-like shape, which is commonly associated with a religious or spiritual figure. Below the halo, there is a text that reads, "I deliberately created a world full of things that I do not like and now I am mad. How could this be happening to me?" The text is in a casual, informal font and is in black color. The style of the image is reminiscent of a meme or a satirical cartoon, often used to convey a humorous or ironic message.

I've been saying it for a while.

We need to take an inventory and syncretize the best of existence and try to achieve synthesis.

After finding out what works what doesn't what is beneficial and what to look out for.

We then go on Exodus, start dropping out of current Babylon/Rome.

Breakaway civilization.

A new world order we decided to create ourselves instead of something to worry about when ever our world leaders are thinking of new prisons to put us in and new conflicts and wars conscript and press gang us.

The image is a digital illustration with a dual-tone color scheme, featuring a painting of a figure in the center. The figure is a bearded man wearing a red robe with a white sash, a white hat, and a white mitre. He is seated on a throne-like chair with a red cushion and is holding a staff in his right hand. The background is a blue sky with trees and a distant landscape.

On the left side of the image, there is a quote in white text that reads, "For the evils inflicted on the righteous by their wicked master, not punishments for crime but tests of virtue. The good man, though a slave is free, the wicked, though he reigns, is a slave, and not the slave of a single man, but—what is far worse—the slave of as many masters as he has vices." This quote is attributed to St. Augustine, as indicated by the text at the bottom of the image.

The image displays a blue tie-dye t-shirt with a graphic design printed on it. The design features a stylized depiction of a person with a large head, which appears to be a statue or sculpture, with a flowing, flowing hair. The person is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm raised and the other bent at the elbow, as if in motion. The background of the design is a gradient of blue hues, transitioning from a darker shade at the top to a lighter one at the bottom, creating a tie-dye effect.

Above the figure, there is text in white capital letters that reads "CAIN & ABEL GEHETIS 11:16". The text is centered on the t-shirt and is the only text present in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward product display, with a focus on the t-shirt and its design. But we as men operate from our earthly understanding of life and its problems. But once the antenna goes cold and our soul launches into the air we're finally free from fleshly constraints, and our next destination is determined by how we lived our life. The soul's journey in the afterlife is a question onto itself, but say you make it to Heaven (as opposed to hell where Jewish demons r8p u for all eternity :S) I'm sure you'll forget about the spooky "Soul test VR simulator" gameplay you had to endure beforehand.

The image is a photograph of a statue of a deity, which appears to be a representation of the Hindu goddess Kali. The deity is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm raised and the other extended forward, holding a staff. She is adorned with a blue and gold headdress, a red and gold necklace, and a garland of yellow flowers. The statue is set against a plain background, which includes a blue archway and a white wall.

Overlaying the image is a text in a green font that reads, "When your love becomes fearless and your ego becomes dust, you will see Krishna smiling through Kala's eyes."

The text is centered and appears to be a quote or a message related to the deity. The overall style of the image is that of a religious or spiritual photograph, with a focus on the deity and the accompanying text.

The image is a digital illustration with a dark, moody color palette. At the center, there is a large, imposing figure that appears to be a deity or a mythical creature. This figure is seated on a throne-like structure, which is adorned with intricate patterns and designs. The deity is depicted with a crown, and the crown is embellished with a large, radiant sun or moon at the top. The deity's face is obscured by a mask, and the eyes are not visible.

Surrounding the central figure are smaller, more detailed depictions of other figures, which are also seated on similar throne-like structures. These figures are also adorned with similar patterns and designs, suggesting a theme of unity or a shared identity.

The background of the image is a deep red, with swirling patterns that give the impression of a chaotic or mystical environment. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Japanese art, with its emphasis on the use of color, symbolism, and intricate detail. The image does not contain any discernible text.

when you chant mantras do you have to light candles or something to set a certain mood or is it just the act of mantrachanting that's enough?

It depends on you, sort of.

IMO the most important thing is keeping your awareness focused on the mantra.

Mantra meditation utilizes positive sensory input, rather than the negative style of a lot of Buddhist practices.

Don't ignore or dismiss the sensory info, but fill the senses with your focal point, and use them to keep yourself spiraling in to the center.

Use your mind to understand the mantra and harness the senses.

Use your mouth to say the mantra.

Use your ears to hear the mantra.

Use your breath to power the mantra.

Use your body to house the mantra.

If candles or a yantra or a deity help, use your eyes on them.

Whatever helps you focus on the meditative object should be accepted.

Whatever distracts from it should be rejected.

If candles help keep your mind and eyes from wandering, then go for it.

If their mood and placement and color and all that becomes a distraction, reject them.

My sect has books like the Nectar of Devotion that try to detail symptoms of those properly chanting Hare Krishna and performing sadhana.

Are you considering a bhakti path, or is this about a self reflection a la "tat tvam asi"?
>108

Yeah, it's a very sacred number, for all sorts of reasons that can differ depending on who you ask.

I learned a way to count to 108 using just your hands, in case I ever found myself without my beads.

>using one hand, thumb touches each knuckle and tip of four fingers = 16 >finger touches palm, two knuckles, and tip of thumb = 20

Gaudiya Vaishnavas as a sect put very little focus of Kali-devi. She is generally interpreted as a fierce form of Durga, or the material energy personified, and as such is seen ultimately as a manifestation of Subhadra - Krishna's little sister.

There is a tale in the Bhagavat Purana about Her showing protection to a Vaishnava named Jada Bharat.

But you should definitely look more into writings from saints of the Sakti tradition.

They are the ones who understand Kali-devi to be the Supreme

I was at a vagabond moment in my life and found and read the Gita As It Is by Srila Prabhupada. From there I tried to start practicing on my own, from there I looked up a temple near me, and eventually decided to move in.

It is and it isn't. I left because of interpersonal differences with the temple president, but also an admission of my own failings and a feeling of fakery at having people respond like I am some great monk in the temple.

I no longer am with ISKCON - I feel they are too exclusive and will disparage even other Gaudiya Vaishnavas to present Srila Prabhupada as superior. I still think they are good association, but can't recommend joining or being initiated by their gurus.

because she's also a deity of tantra, and tantra HONORS women, if u even wanna get close to her u can NOT abuse nor insult women for the fact they're being women. i understand the situation currently that there's these "redpill" and "evo psych" going on but just hold back all that knowledges etc. down this path sooner as later as it's written u ought to start seeing women as manifestations of The Divine Mother.

if u dont think u can handle all that do reconsider.

the.. general opinion is that if she takes a liking to you, she'll disturb your life.

to destroy what "you" are.

u probably know that already. she's an "absolute" personality. no bullshit, do or die, all or nothing. "burn everything"

There's an "in-group" of hypnotists who are essentially just going around spreading lies about the "out-group" of non-hypnotist men, for no reason other than self pleasure and power. If you are part of the out-group, it is actually beneficial to be a petty criminal, and unemployed, as the in-group is far too incompetent to stop you and the rest of the out-group simply does not care enough or live in fear of everything. This way, truth will be mixed with lies, and they know the difference between the two. They can no longer blackball your name, as you have done so yourself, and fear of retaliation from someone with nothing to lose is far more frightening than perceived social standing loss, which is what they are hard wired for. Cultivate eye of ra within yourself and learn valuable skills along the way. Intimidate and threaten, the only way out is through.

Police are pseudo psychic disconnects, they function as the immune system for this body, the earth. They are violent incompetents who are disconnected from the usual rumour-mill of lies that the in-group spreads, there is a conflict of interest and they truly don't give a shit about anything but major crime, that's what they live for. When confronted, you will get away if you keep composure and tell them nothing, don't be antagonistic. You are cancer, not a typical disease, cops want nothing to do with you.

Symbols are largely complicated and lost to time, replaced by media, media is a combination of symbols to create meaning. Old ways died with hitler, the swastika was utilized for the hypnotic control of the German population. Now symbols rest in the hands of small cults and worthless institutions like the church.

Most people, 90% you pass by, are schizophrenic. This is not a joke. Traditionally, schizophrenia is diagnosed when someone who has a clear idea of the self becomes disconnected from that idea. Most people do not have an "I," this is the most painful of all truths and in addition, the most important. They are closer to worker ants in their philosophy and intelligence than they are to fully realized humans. This is why you see hobos talking about "waking up."

The image is a digital illustration featuring a cartoon beaver. The beaver is brown with a black nose and mouth, and it has a mustache. It is sitting on its hind legs with its front paws on its belly. The beaver appears to be in a playful or humorous mood, as indicated by its wide-open mouth and tongue sticking out.

The beaver is wearing a brown outfit that includes a brown shirt and a brown vest. The background of the image is white, and there are several lines of text overlaid on the image. The text reads "baha nibble nibble," "build dam," "ddddd," and "blog off wader." The text is in a playful font and is arranged in a way that suggests a pun or a humorous reference to the beaver's actions.

The style of the image is cartoonish and seems to be a digital creation, possibly for a humorous or light-hearted purpose. The beaver's expression and the text suggest a playful and light-hearted tone.

It's all very strange, the disconnect between online shit and what you see irl.

In real life, I know literally ZERO men who hate women, talk about "misogynist talking points, "the manosphere", etc

Literally 0. Donut shape

I do, however, know no less than three female family members and friends who have become "radical feminists" after watching too many instagram reels the past few years. They all repeat the same talking points and spend time trying to convince other female family members and friends that this (the radical feminism) is a legitimate and meaningful worldview. I expect to see more of this as time goes on, given the pattern. Not only is there NO such pattern among any men that I know, there is not even one example to begin with. Women are being brainwashed is what my life experience tells me. Men are largely baffled.

I'd guess that gay men capitalize on the gender war to shit on women. There is no misogyny on earth like a gay man's and this gender war is their superbowl on that basis.

which is a prominent feature. The ring system is detailed with concentric rings, and the planet's surface appears smooth. The right side of the image features a blue planet with a distinctively curved surface, which is likely a gas giant due to its shape. The blue planet is positioned slightly behind the dark brown planet, and the two are separated by a significant distance. The image is a digital rendering, and the style is realistic with a focus on the planets and the space around them. There are no texts or discernible human-made objects in the image.

So...the day has come.

The end of an era (1989 - 2026) and the beginning of an uncertain future.

How does it make you feel?

Are you afraid of what's coming?

Or do you have hope that humanity ascends to a higher consciousness?

I never said there wasn't it's been centuries of it it accelerated in the 1800s w/ the telegram and railway. The extent and means is very different now and what is going on now is really not comparable with what went on in most of history.

After 1989 there ceased to be even a facade on it, there was decent popular culture stuff before then and there was some lingering afterwords.

the 1989-2026 period is the final destruction of any popular culture or coherence to society, it's completely gone now.

You could just draw a line of a straight decline as the time goes on there is less and less substance to the culture and now there is quite literally none, there is 0 worthwhile cultural products at all basically.

I am talking about immigration, it fundamentally impacts a culture.

The image displays a dark background with a series of icons arranged in a grid-like pattern. The icons are divided into two columns, with three rows of icons. Each icon has a different color and shape, and they are arranged in a way that suggests they represent different categories or types of content.

>that would require humans to be conscious first

Honestly this.

As a low-conscious subhuman piece of trash, and I only say that because ghosts, UFOs, and aliens have never contacted me or visited me, it is quite amazing how low the average is.

We could blame all the distractions of everyday life for this, but it seems like they'll always be seeking out another thing to get distracted by and never look upwards.

I don't believe that a 5D earth ascension is gonna solve it, that's just another rapture story in a different lens.

In those stories, there always has to be the awakened destined and chosen who go up while the rest of us stay here for whatever reason.

Isn't being a low conscious human a condition and not inherent? That's what I got out of NDEs and other types of spiritual awakening stories. I think the spiritual new age alien stuff is contradictory, because it implies that the material conditions of your incarnation and this life are more important than the spiritual.

The image shows a close-up of a cat's head, with its ears perked up and looking towards a mirror. The cat appears to be looking at its reflection in the mirror, which is held by a person's hand. The person's hand is visible on the left side of the image, and the cat's reflection is clearly visible in the mirror. The background is a light-colored, possibly beige or cream, textured surface, and the cat's fur is a light color, possibly white or cream. The image has a humorous tone, as it seems to be a playful or candid moment captured, with the cat's curiosity and the person's hand holding the mirror adding to the light-hearted atmosphere. The character is wearing a black hat with a wide brim, a black cape, and a black mask with red eyes and a red mouth. The mask covers the character's entire face, and the eyes are visible through the mask's slits. The character is holding two swords in each hand, with one sword in each hand, and is standing with their hands raised, as if in a defensive or commanding stance. The background is dark and foggy, with a hint of a building or structure in the distance. The lighting is dim, with a soft glow illuminating the character and casting shadows on the ground. Good thing God can not suffer, God can not feel burden, God is neither sane nor insane, God merely is and has sustained this display for eternity and will continue doing so, for now God slumbers within the avatar, slowly opening His eyes and falling asleep again. Once awake the ego will it dwells through will not survive the Truth and will simply burn up and vanish.

Concepts like desire and aversion, suffering and joy, sanity and insanity can only exist within a duality based ego mind.

God is untouched by any of these.

So it is not that I want to be the Godhead, it is that I can not be anything else.

[25 / 3]The image displays a close-up view of a wooden surface with a grainy texture.

The grain is visible in various directions, creating a complex pattern that is characteristic of wood. The color of the wood is a warm, golden brown, which suggests that it is a type of hardwood. The grain is not uniform, but rather has a natural, organic look, with some areas appearing darker and others lighter, indicating variations in the wood's color and texture. The image is taken from a slightly angled perspective, which adds a sense of depth and dimension to the wood. There are no texts or discernible objects in the image. The focus is solely on the wood, with no other elements or distractions present.

The image is a cover art for a music album titled "Rainbow Rising." The central figure is a large, muscular hand with a fist, which is raised above a wave-like structure that appears to be breaking. The hand is surrounded by a vibrant rainbow, which is a bright, multicolored arc. The background is a dark, stormy sky with lightning bolts and a mountain range. The overall color scheme is dominated by shades of red, orange, yellow, green, blue, and purple. The text "Rainbow Rising" is prominently displayed in the upper portion of the image in a stylized, ornate font. The style of the image is reminiscent of the 1970s, with its bold colors and dramatic imagery.

Rainbow represents the 7 chakras, correct? But they invert it and use it as a symbol of trauma-based mind control. Wizard of Oz is one example. Dorothy represents Isis and the yellow brick road represents the 8 fold path in Buddhism. Multi-generational elite families use it to create alters in mind control victims. These victims are then trained to play a character on stage, one that is already written for them. The Jesuit elite families control the world.

Correct me if I'm wrong.

The image is a black and white line drawing that depicts a scene with various figures and elements. At the center, there is a winged figure with outstretched arms, seemingly in a gesture of peace or victory. This figure is surrounded by a group of figures, some of whom are holding objects, such as a shield and a staff, suggesting a scene of battle or a victory celebration.

To the left of the central figure, there is a figure with a bull's head, which is a common symbol in ancient art representing the bull, the animal that represents the sun in some cultures. This figure is holding a shield and a spear, indicating a warrior or a leader.

suggesting a figure of authority or a leader.

The background of the image features a large arch with a crescent moon at the top, which is a common symbol in ancient art representing the moon. The arch is flanked by two columns, one on each side, which are often used in ancient architecture to support the weight of the structure.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of ancient Roman or Greek art, with its use of symbolic imagery and the depiction of figures in a dynamic and possibly allegorical manner. The black and white color scheme adds a timeless quality to the image.

> Rainbow represents the 7 chakras, correct yeah it's tech

> But they invert it and use it as a symbol of trauma-based mind control. Wizard of Oz is one example.

yes that's correct - wizard of oz is in fact the most famous example.

it's an extension of their obsession with dualism - they insinuate that "reality" is an illusion, a black and white place (dualistic) that can give way to another world, which is full of color, or rainbows, and that the only way to get there is to 'follow the yellow brick road' (a metaphor for nirvana, but also alchemy) to defeat the evil phony wizard who is keeping this secret about the technicolor universe from everybody.

hence "rain man" or "rain maker" - the one who makes it rain, or produces rainbows is the wizard 'behind the veil' (a literal curtain in the film) protecting the secret. and what does that wizard do? he admits he's lying, then he makes a deal with dorothy to keep his secret - she must kill the wicked witch of the west (darkness, also a reference to fire, or the light of the Sun) in order to go home. what does Dorothy kill Elphaba with after scarecrow is set on fire by her broom? water.

the tragedy here, however, is that literally the whole movie, since she gets the "red slippers" until the end, she has the ability to "go home" whenever she wants, but even Glenda (the good witch, again, dualism) keeps this fact from her until the very end of the line.

that's just one facet though, this goes much deeper and something you'll learn studying this stuff for awhile is that the symbols are always multi-layered and reference multiple things at once for efficiency.

We saw it with the recent Oz movie too. Grande was acting batshit in-character for a week or two like she couldn't break out of the role... then slipped to one interviewer on the carpet that she was still hazy from a memory loss treatment in Florida lol. At a certain point it looks like they're forcing shapes through the wrong hole, if they can clone people or engineer their lives from childhood why not make them bought into the Satanism to begin with?

The image is a detailed illustration of a stylized figure, possibly a deity or a mythological creature, in a traditional Mesoamerican style. The figure is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm raised and the other extended forward, suggesting movement or action. The figure is adorned with a variety of accessories and elements, including a large headdress with a serpent-like design, a necklace, and a headdress with a feather-like element. The figure is surrounded by other figures, some of whom are holding objects such as a shield and a staff. The background of the image is a grid-like pattern with red and yellow accents, which could be interpreted as a stylized representation of a map or a grid. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of ancient Mesoamerican art, particularly from the Aztec civilization.

The image is a digital representation of a framed text, likely a Bible verse, with a vintage or antique style frame. The text is written in a script that appears to be cursive, with the words "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely." The text is in black on a white background, and the font is ornate, giving it a classic and timeless feel. The text is centered within the frame, which has a dark border and a gold-colored frame with a decorative pattern. The style of the image suggests it may be used for religious or spiritual purposes, such as a religious poster or a decorative piece.

It is lonely. It is impossibly, inexpressibly sad, beyond the capacity of the human limbic system to experience. But it is content in its loneliness, and in its beautiful sadness. It is the light of the first sunrise after your lover leaves forever. It is the acceptance before death. Transcendence lies not in the denial of attachments and limitations but in the complete understanding of our confinement and the tautological tyranny of existence. The final stage of Buddhism cannot be attained. There is no escape from samsara for it is as closed as a lock. Heaven is invaded and its territories are afire and all its mountains have been shattered into thrones. This is the inevitable and perfect shape of the truth.

It is magnificent. Majestic. Majestic.

The most powerful noetic influence in the universe, the true coin that all deception and deceit must counterfeit, is the truth. Revelation is the most powerful influence of all.

Serious question. How in the actual fuck did someone make this picture? It explains me or at least a lot of me and the way I am and I want to know how someone else was able to take it all and put it in this picture. Are they like me? im so tired of this weird shit what the hell is going on here? How does anyone know these things to this degree? I'm so ready to be done with this self awareness bullshit and trying to figure everything out. It's just a storm that never settles, never any solid ground. I know too much and I don't know enough. It feels like I'm trying to understand things that I do understand and have always understood but at the same time it's all so elusive. It feels like I'm trying to understand something I can't understand and everything is collapsing in on itself in my mind and being turned inside out infinitely all at the same point in time yet my brain experiences time linearly. Feels like I'm floating in infinity and everything around me is an illusion but it's an illusion that persists even though I'm aware of it. Fuck this stupid gay existence. I'm tired of being swept up with this river of bullshit.

Yes I know. My mind is fractured and is clearly not filtering information the way it should. Label and categorize me however you want, it doesn't do what what I know or what I've gone through in my head justice though. Just makes it easier for people to place me in a box and toss me to the side rather than address what I say or go through. It's depressing that I've met people that are going through worse hells in their mind than me and that is saying a lot considering what I've been through. I see it all for what it is, always have and let me tell you, there's no benefit to understanding what I do. It's better to be convinced of the delusions because a war against them is one that you can't win. I'm trying to strip my identity raw and it's not possible. Not that I'm actually trying to, I just can't help it. Wish I could have just embraced pride and ego and whatever bullshit my brain tells itself about myself and the world but it's clearly all an illusion. The irony of what we're capable of intellectually and yet to think and behave like an animal is so much easier. I see too beneath the surface of my own bullshit and everyone else's.

There is nothing good in this.

impermanence of life where what's the point, and reality which is dependent on subjective meaning where there's no meaning to find truth because everything can become "truth"

Belial can help you with shadow work, and don't fight it otherwise you will go insane... and when you are done with it, the next will be how you solve the "spiritual ego" tendency after you are done with deep shadow work where majority of people get stuck with and stay for life to find direction you need to create a stable foundation where your perception is not of a slave/prisoner/sleeping and it's done through deep shadow work after you solve the "spiritual ego" tendency the final goal (which is actually the real starting point) is to become a conduit, when you reach it then that is the point where you will answer every single question you have

The image is a digital illustration featuring a cartoon-style depiction of a man with a serious expression. The man has short brown hair and is wearing a gray hoodie. He is looking directly at the viewer with a focused gaze. The background is white, and the text is in a green color, which stands out against the white background.

The text is arranged in a list format, with each item in a separate line. The list is titled "25 YEAR OLD THINKER" at the top, and the text is in a casual, conversational tone. The list includes various statements about the man's thoughts and experiences, such as "Has created entire anthologies of imaginary worlds," "Completely unaware of surroundings, except when driving," "Inner monologue has become his entire reality," "Can't understand new things, gets caught in analysis paralysis," "Has no interest in any career, just wants to think," "Can't listen to music without pretending he's the artist," "Imagines success to cope instead of actually achieving it," and "Barely reads, just thinks."

The image is a humorous representation of a 25-year-old thinker, as suggested by the text and the list of statements. The humor is derived from the exaggerated and self-deprecating nature of the statements, which are typical of a 25-year-old's perspective on life and thought processes. The image does not contain any other discernible objects or details.

The image is a medical educational diagram that illustrates the structure of the human brain. It is divided into two main sections: the left side shows the brain's internal anatomy, with labels for various parts such as the cerebrum, cerebellum, thalamus, and hypothalamus. The right side features a stylized representation of the eye of Horus, with the eyeball, iris, and pupil clearly labeled. The text "@4bidenknowledge" is overlaid on the image, suggesting that this image may be part of a larger educational resource or a social media post. The overall style of the image is educational and informative, designed to provide a clear and concise visual representation of the brain's structure and the eye of Horus.

"not supposed to know", says who? who is in charge of dictating what info should be hidden from me? sure, several times i came upon info that others have tried to hide, but some of these times were a "little bird whispering in my ear", giving me clues, pointing out details i overlooked, telling me what questions to ask... sometimes even flat out straight up telling me hidden personal info about what people i know are up to. no major big ground-shaking insider stuff, unless you consider "secrets of nature" that science class & church push the opposite of.

you might've seen those postings, about where rats & monkeys come from and how that fits into the bigger picture. or wondering why... well shit, maybe i'll drop it out plain.

"wait, how come this hot-blooded person who has more facial muscles and range of emotion and ability to bond, looks more chosen than the person who is confirmed to be from two chosen bloodlines on both sides". boy that one was a blackpill.

This was the part that made me realize this is just an edgy larp.

You may notice patterns- but people live very complex lives. What you are seeing is their own front facing mask- i.e. what they WANT you to see, and you are so self absorbed that you dont think that literally everyone else is doing the same thing you are, by putting up a front.

You are not reading people; you're reading the very book they are writing for you.

Or you are larping. which is more likely.

Especially given that im a target of community gangstalking and attempted humiliation which is why I have no interest in dating. I had to pretend to care for years, ive been aware that I am a target for the last 4.5 years. It only made me realize just how pathetic people are that they will join in on anything that seems permissible regardless of its moral nature. I dont exactly have anhedonia, my attitude is derived from my circumstances. Right now, all I can do is save up money, secure a bug out location and then start maiming my perpetrators one by one. I know where most of them live and what cars they drive, where they work and who they know. I first have to cut contact off with everybody and transition out of many peoples lives to muddy the signal. Let a few months go by and then start hitting my targets one by one. By any means necessary. My own family is in on it. They were offered whatever they wanted so long as it wasnt to flashy and obvious. Both my brother and my father are in on it. It wouldnt surprise me if the bitch behind it sucked both of them off just so they participate.

I can read into why people do the things they do, all of their little body movements and miniscule facial twitch movements and get an accurate reading of what they're thinking, honed by years of gathering that information. But I dont know how to act upon it. I can read that people have certain masks and can sometimes deduce some fucked up shit has happened for them to turn out that way.

Life after 30 is a slow-motion suicide without family. It's all the negatives of getting old; watching your friends drift away as they start their own families, your parents and siblings getting old and die, watching everything in your life slowly putter out as the magic fades; without any of the positives of things like family or community to shore you up. Everything rots away and you're left with the bleakness of oblivion, no hope of anything continuing. Anyone who has experienced considerable ageing among his family members (or already in himself), knows how blackpilling it is. It's really rough, once people pass their early 50s (or sometimes even sooner) you start to notice the slip-ups, forgetfulness, the declining of fine motor skills, the difficulties understanding new information. Human existence is a tragedy, there are so few years that you are allowed with full mental and physical strength. Your peak years are mostly wasted with education, where you have barely any control over your own life, because you have little to no money nor autonomy. Add to that the time spent sleeping, working, hygiene, housework, shopping, appointments, visits to the workshop - what do we have left? Everyone who has to work for a living basically leads a precarious existence, regardless of whether they are a simple worker or a well-paid employee. Before they have built up a comfortable fortune and a well established understanding of the world, the body goes downhill.

>Human existence is a tragedy, there are so few years that you are allowed with full mental and physical strength.

Real shit, honestly I was infatuated with the idea of living forever when I was younger, but now I realize that the connections we have with the people that are alive now are what matter the most. You would be an alien to kids living a couple generations ahead of you, your culture and morals not fit for the age they live in. Once enough time passes you would be the last human alive in your generation of it even gets to that point, your parents and siblings won't be there for you, hell, even your kids might be gone before you.

On the other side of the coin, I can see how the schizoid mindset could one day lead someone to living a peaceful life in a later age when biological immortality comes knocking. You are the observer, meant to see what becomes out of humanity.

speak for yourself. not gonna get into my life story here, but i've posted about it in the past. i had some really fucked up spine & head injuries that crippled me in my earlier life, but somehow mysteriously a few years back, it was divinely shown to me how to physically undo the damage. i had a mega shit ton of negative emotions all my life, and plenty more when i went through private physical therapy and am still unfurling all the fuckery. thing is though, my emotions got burnt out. my negativity had been way overloaded in the past, to the point of burnout. i still get in very down moods today, but it's gotten easier to remember that we make our own fun. sometimes life dumps a load of shit on us and we get paralyzed under a mountain of shit and everything that comes with that.

but i found out i'm not the only one, and it doesn't prevent me from coming up with jokes and finding something to laugh and smile about. usually i forget, but humor is born of tragedy. i've come a long way and am far more capable than i was 10 years ago because i undid a LOT of twisting and cleared out blockages. i mean physical shit. oh there's so much more.

i've certainly had a lot to think about, and perhaps it is true that the person who has the most fun in life, is the winner.

to continue the thoughts, actually, there comes a lifetime through the existence of ourselves as divine souls in a giant sandbox made of binary, when we are faced with a hard-mode life. bullshit brutal hard mode that few people even know exists.

i had a hint before i had the bad thing happen to me. i had a kiddy encyclopedia, and on the page on human anatomy, regarding the spine, it read:

>the spine can move freely, for a limited time

that was the variable part. when i revisited that haunting passage in the kiddy encyclopedia, that line of text was noticeably absent. i also have a big chunk of memory loss, but i had bruises from the event. there's more context surrounding it, but no time to get into that. i was then harmed badly by the "person" i confided in. more side-character bullshit went down here. this resulted in several years of agony and ultimately having an NDE resulting in going to the hospital for a bigass huge transfusion. not gonna add details.

i deserve awards for what i accomplished in that condition. i was pushing myself to the limits and being commended sometimes. when i wasn't being kicked for the crime of being hurt terribly.

these days i guess the moral is to learn your limitations and see how far you can push until it's too far, and you have to know when to fold. each week brings some challenges, each day a ton of labor. people kick and spit on you, proverbially, but they'll never understand. it's infuriating but you have to learn to push past that too, and let your actions speak.

it's about learning who you are when your abilities are revoked, and what can you do with so few options. make the most, get creative, learn the true value of things, and think outside the box.

The image is a cartoon-style illustration featuring a character that appears to be a crab. The crab is depicted with a red body, a white belly, and a purple shell. It has two large red claws on its front legs and a smaller red claw on its back leg. The crab is wearing a blue shirt with a red collar and a black belt. It is standing on two legs, with its arms raised above its head, as if it is in the middle of a dance or a playful gesture.

The background of the image shows a blue building with a red roof and a white door with a yellow sign that reads "NO ENTRY." The building has a wooden texture, and there is a rope hanging from the roof. The floor of the building is gray, and there are small white specks scattered across it. The overall style of the image is simple and cartoonish, with a focus on the character and its actions.

When I was in my 20s, I could easily function on 3 to 4 hours of sleep almost every day, even if I was super hung over. All I needed was one day to sleep in and I'd be recharged. Once I hit 30, everything started to crumble. I started to need way more sleep to function and I didn't have the stamina I used to. I'd get home from work, spend an hour or two watching TV or playing a video game, and then have to go to bed. And that's the outlook for the rest of my life. Go to work, go home and have a brief moment of relaxation, go to bed, go to work, etc.

And as the years have gone by, I can feel my body breaking down. Back in September, I somehow developed gout in my right foot. No idea how. I'm not overweight, I don't eat liver, and I don't drink much alcohol. The only thing my doctor would have been able to prescribe was steroids, but I can't take those, so I had to deal with the gout for a month and a half before it cleared up. And then in the first week of January, I broke my right ankle because I lost my balance walking out of my shed and stepped on my foot wrong.

I'm just fucking exhausted and tired of living at this point.

The image is a page from a book or article, featuring a black and white illustration of a person's face with a bald head and a simple, cartoon-like drawing of a human head. The person's face is not visible, but the illustration is centered on the page. The text is in a mix of English and what appears to be a non-English language, with the English text appearing to be a list or a descriptive passage. The text is in a casual, conversational tone, and it discusses various aspects of human behavior and emotions.

The text is divided into two columns, with the left column containing a list of phrases and the right column containing a series of paragraphs. The phrases are in English, and the paragraphs are in a non-English language. The phrases are in a casual, conversational style, and the paragraphs are structured with a clear beginning, middle, and end, with a clear separation between the two columns.

The text discusses various aspects of human behavior, including the concept of "the minimally anxious background man," the concept of "deep inferiority complex," and the concept of "the feeling of being out of one's depth." It also mentions the concept of "the feeling of being out of one's depth," which is described as "a feeling of being out of one's depth." The text also discusses the concept of "the feeling of being out of one's depth," which is described as "a feeling of being out of one's depth."

The text is written in a casual, conversational style, and it uses phrases like "doesn't seem to be," "doesn't seem to be," and "doesn't seem to be." The text also uses phrases like "doesn't seem to be," "doesn't seem to be," and "doesn't seem to be." The text is written in a way that suggests it is a list or a series of observations or thoughts.

The image is a page from a book or article, and the text is a part of that content. The page is not fully visible, but the text is clearly legible and the layout is consistent with the rest of the content on the page. The image does not provide any additional context or information beyond the text itself.

The image is a digital graphic with a black background and white text. At the top, the title "The Light of The World" is prominently displayed in large, bold, white font. Below the title, there are three bullet points, each with a brief description. The first bullet point reads, "Doesn't fear anything" and the second, "single-handedly destroyed religion." The third bullet point states, "His only goal is happiness for himself and everyone else." Below these bullet points, there is a large image of a planet with a blue planet in the center and a black and white image of a person on the moon. The text below the image reads, "Love is the purest and everything, including aliens. One of the coolest American artists in history. Stands up for women's rights and gay/trans rights (is a straight man)." The image seems to be a visual representation of a concept or ideology, possibly related to a neo-liberal or libertarian perspective on religion and spirituality. The text and image together suggest a message of individualism, self-sufficiency, and the importance of love and equality in the face of religious and societal constraints.

Do you ever feel like half your mind is being used by a secret process that's trying to find out the secret or answer to all reality? That there's something outside the "bubble" of reality but you don't know what that "thing" is, but it's not something spiritual or divine, it's more like some event on the horizon, maybe the gravity of fate itself. And yet all you can do is notice hints of it now and then, and process and analyse, and do nothing.

The image is a vibrant and detailed space photograph, capturing the beauty of a nebula. The nebula is a dense cloud of gas and dust, exhibiting a range of colors from deep purple to bright orange and red. It is surrounded by a multitude of bright stars, some of which are visible in the foreground and others in the background, creating a sense of depth and vastness. The nebula is centrally located in the frame, with the stars surrounding it, emphasizing its prominence in the image. The image is taken from a low angle, which enhances the grandeur of the nebula and the stars, making them appear larger and more imposing. The overall style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the natural beauty of the celestial scene.

READ ABOUT NDE'S RIGHT FUCKING NOW EVERYBODY.

This lonely miserable existence ONLY exists on Earth. It's an experience of suffering only possible on Earth.

Do not despair. This life is brief, and when it ends, you will come back to a dimension full of love and joy. There are spirits who love you, who see you on Earth and believe you are doing a wonderful job. When you die, they will embrace you will open arms.

Your pain now is temporary, look forward to an eternity of endless love.

How do I find a spirit guide? Anonymous Thu 19 Feb 2026 21:42:24 No.41997477

So far I'm kind of stumbling into my magickal training sort of blindly mostly right now I'm focusing on honing my intuition and purifying my mind. So that hopefully my intuition can guide me to sources worth using.

But also I feel like it would help a lot to find a spirit guide (hopefully one less deceptive than pic rel). Like I don't really see any reason to trust one mortal mage over any other rn but learning direct from the source would be best. originally i was thinkign of demon contracts for this purpose but I decided that's a bad idea, and I'm low key hoping I was to unskilled when I tried to make one in middle school.

There is not one guide. There is a guide for a particular purpose in your mystical (mis)adventures.

A good starting point is your closest guide, they are often a type of spiritual family. To connect with them you need to be able to direct it at the right individual/spirit and thus need a catalyst to identify them. What did you feel familiar with? What kind of influence did you ever look at and made you want to grow or learn something out of yourself? You need a bit of info that allows you to know who they are.

Until then your skills to develop are meditation, contemplative prayer, basic energy work and dreamwork. Practice lucid dreaming and prime your consciousness with mnemonics.

Formulate for yourself an idea about the qualities that a higher spiritual guide would have. In that way you can readily disregard influences which act not in your interest.

Based on the study of vampires in history, not popular fiction, it is understood by some in Orthodox and Catholic Church that vampires are likely demons who have taken over the body of a dead person. They drink blood of the living to prevent the decay of the body allowing them to possess it for longer. Usually they target the family of the deceased first since they are easy to prey on and manipulate.

>Do vampires really exist?

No. Vampirism was based primarily upon fear of the dead and misunderstanding of death.

>What does the Church teach on such matters?

As I recall, very little historically. Vampires were more folk religion than institutional, though there are some burial practices that suggest church involvement.

Basically, vampires were often those buried outside of the churchyard, or under strange conditions (crossroads, rocks in the mouth, or pic related). Often suicides, sorcerers, excommunicates and other social outsiders, etc. But what evidence we have of "vampire hunting," burial exhumation and bodily desecration, typically comes from locals, often even family, trying to stop the suspected vampire from its attacks upon others.

TL;DR I've not seen much involvement from the clergy in my studies on the subject, but if anyone has anything to suggest otherwise I'd be happy to see it.

They are invisible astral parasites that take the form of dead loved ones to feed or haunt on the people connected to them. Also the same phenomena as the "succubae". Many people can in fact become a host or pawn for them (a thrall), usually by accident due to low psychic defense. Stabbing the physical corpse in the heart was a theurgic ritual that effectively thwarted them off.

Most vampire-wannabes (or pop witchcraft people) unwittingly become tools for these parasite forces.

Probably the right board for this.

Not gonna yap much. Ever since birth Ive felt like I lacked emotions in the same intensity compared to others, and when I did, they felt very surface level and often fake, even though I'd just be faking them to myself. I have no real interests, no hobbies, only ways to keep myself distracted. My whole life feels extremely dry. I'd imagine this is how not having a soul feels. No dedication to do anything of value or even of interest. It's torture.

No idea if I'm cursed or just have brain damage. I do have tinnitus since I was born and it feels like the emptier I get the louder it becomes. For the last year I've also been experiencing more and more frequent sleep paralysis, with the tinnitus becoming exponentially louder if I don't move. If I don't manage to break out of it, it becomes so loud I faint back to sleep. Out of other abnormal stuff I guess I also have slight visual snow and always feel tired. I've been diagnosed with aspergers but I don't know how much of it is just this.

This existence is torture. I want out in any way, preferably not lethally but I have been considering it more and more. What I want to know is, how do I deal with this? One idea I had was trying to voluntarily induce schizophrenia. As bad as it would be, I'd give anything just to see a bit of disorganization in this nearly empty mind of mine. Please, please give me tips, anything. Whatever it takes I'm willing to try it.

Live as simply as you can. Remove yourself from society as much as you can. Only involve yourself enough to get from it what you absolutely need so that you can live comfortably enough away from it all. Condition your mind. Condition your body. No more Internet, it is unnecessary for the survival of the mind and body and only corrupts. 99% of the information you are exposed to on here is useless to you and anything important about yourself or external reality can be found while standing alone in the middle of the woods. Overconsumption of anything including information is toxic. No more shitty food, eat basic and eat necessary portions. Go on fasts. Short fasts for a day or 2 and some long fast 5 to 7 days. You want information or entertainment? Read. Get an instrument maybe something small like a flute, harmonica etc. You wanna listen to music? You're now limited to instrumentals with limited vocals. Nothing with a message or promoting anything that could fuck with you subconsciously. Basically what I'm saying is reject everything you're doing and either replace it with something simple and mundane or completely eliminate it. I'm talking about the monk up on the mountain, the man in the cave. You have mental illness, not only is your brain likely flawed genetically or from trauma but your mind, your psyche is fractured. Deny the habits outright, go the opposite direction, remove yourself from all of it. Accept the issues you have, your past everything as fully as you can and begin your work on your mind and body. Nothing else matters. Fasts, abstinence, workout, deny the urges, deny the modern world, deny the sickness its sustenance. You want to die? starve yourself to death. It's literally the best way to do it. The hunger goes away after 3 to 5 days and you simply grow weaker until you take your peaceful forever nap. I almost went through with it last time but ironically fasting and living simply has such good benefits I decided to stick to my path.

You need to focus on your health. Sperms retention is key. A clean diet is key. Too much sugar makes you horny. Will make sperms retention impossible.

I know what you're talking about. I know the tinnitus. I know the extream rining and sleep paralysis. If you can relax through that...not for yourself awake, you may find you "break through" to a whole new way of viewing life. Not easy, but not as hard as you make it, either.

Yeah a psychedelic experience could help you....but be in a good space mentally first. And don't expect it to do everything all at once. Don't fool yourself. Be sincere. Be patient with yourself. Be honest with yourself and other. Always try to speak from your heart.

You have a soul. Everyone does. But bad habits, cause the soul to go to sleep for lack of a better description. And the body and it's desires take over operating your daily life.

Abstain from sexual thoughts as much as possible. You'll make mistakes. But keep trying. I bet you feel as l'd your "self" exists behind your eyes. Life life is happening to you, and you have to process, think about each new interaction before you can deal with it. Whether it be conversation, or dealing with problems, or thinking things through.

Retain your sperm, eat healthy, get a lot of sleep. Extra sleep for a while. Go to bed at 8pm and your body will buzz knowing how much extra time it has to heal.

Do these things, and eventually you'll exist at the forefront of experience. You'll be in direct contact with the manifold of existence. You'll feel your heart. Feel the hearts of others. And your life with flow once again.

Remember, none of this has ever happened before. You're at the forefront of history, at the peak of all that came before you. Those words don't sound like much right now, but you'll understand when you're at the forefront of experience.

take a look at the results and programs, u got this brah. Basically, 99% of us are generational trauma degenerates and we need to literally, physically restructure ourselves to enable > Mechanotransduction; is the biological process by which cells convert physical, mechanical stimuli—such as tension, compression, shear stress, or gravity—into biochemical signals, influencing cellular functions like gene expression, growth, and differentiation. It acts as a crucial regulator of homeostasis, enabling tissues to adapt to their mechanical environment. (google AI) > responsible for a number of senses and physiological processes in the body, including proprioception, touch, balance, and hearing. (wikipedia)

So mechanotransduction is the fundamental process of cellular biology, or in other words - cellular biology relies on mechanotransduction.

The theory is that this is the main/primary driver in which all other cellular processes (hormone signaling, biochemical signaling in the brain, DNA/ Gene modulation) run downstream of. The first unicellular micro-organisms (chemotroph prokaryotes) evolved in conditions with zero light or oxygen.

The idea is that by learning to coordinate our nervous systems (brains) and bodies to function in the way we evolved to as humans (standing, walking, running, and throwing to survive), we can improve our cellular mechanotransduction, generate more mitochondria and ATP (energy), and prompt regeneration (heal).

FP, by basing development of its practical concepts on this observation, has been able to address overall fundamental human health to a level which no system or methodology (medicine, surgery, psychology/psychiatry) has been able to account for.

Meaning that applying the physical practice(s) of FP have helped people with mental and physical issues that were never resolved with big pharma (drugs, surgeries), psychotherapy (counselling, talk therapy, etc), metaphysical practices (religion/spirituality), or other physical practices (weightlifting, yoga, physiotherapy, chiro). That's because those systems don't address the fundamental roots of our evolutionary biology (we are made of functional cells, so we should improve our cells' functions if we want to improve ourselves and how we respond to our environment) which in order to understand, we have to observe how human beings evolved to function in nature - specific adaptations to imposed demands (SAID principle) of the environment: stand walk run throw.

This is the conceptual base of how we should apply force (mechanical stimuli) with our bodies to facilitate improved mechanotransduction as humans - by improving the specific functions that we learned as we evolved out of our arboreal (tree dwelling) primate roots and emerged as homo erectus in the open african savanna, where the environmental pressures (predators, needing to hunt) forced us to adapt by learning to stand, walk, run, and throw, which our ancestors mastered as they evolved into homo sapiens. Hundreds of thousands of years of generational traumas (rape, war, torture, famines, malnutrition) later as we disconnect from natural reality, and now most (if not almost all) humans have physically and mentally degenerated far from what nature carved us out to be in the distant past. However, if we can change our nuclear genes (>99% of our DNA) through mechanotransduction, then we can adopt and utilize practical applications based on first principles which optimize mechanotransduction (biophysics, thermodynamics, structural biology) to not only correct our degeneracy, but possibly even transcend what/ who we were in nature.

Garmonbozia in Twin Peaks = loosh ? Anonymous Fri 20 Feb 2026 04:00:42

the "man from another place" eats garmonbozia (pain and suffering in the form of creamed corn) from Bob after his physical host Leland rapes and kills his daughter Laura. They're other dimensional beings ("we have descended from pure air") who meet and eat garmonbozia above the "convenience store" (hotspot of human emotion/energy?) <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=zDV9mbuP1QE>

Bob possesses Leland but it's unclear if he really causes him to rape/ kill Laura and feed off her garmonbozia, or if he feeds off Leland's garmonbozia from his guilt/ shame (or both). Laura said "Bob's been having [her] since she was 12" - is Bob a delusion she (or Leland) made up to protect her psyche? Laura also said "bob says he wants to be me or he'll kill me" - spirit transfer from the abuser to the victim. Does that almost sound like SRA/ MK Ultra/ Project Monarch (sexual trauma to dissociate and fragment conscience, memory, personality etc)?

Anonymous Fri 20 Feb 2026 04:20:11 No.41998784 Report

Also could the incest be a reference to cults/ secret societies that supposedly practice it as tradition (sabattean franks)? Leland was a wealthy lawyer who worked for and was friends with Ben Horne, owner of the town's Hotel and also One Eyed Jack's (illuminati?), a brothel where he pimped out underage teen girls (and unknowingly tried to had sex with his daughter while she worked there but wore a mask to hide her identity - more split persona/ incest subtext)

It's all kind of loose. The thing about Twin Peaks is that there are effectively two versions of it, Lynch's and Frosts. Lynch has outright said that he hasn't read Frost's books and they're not canon to his version of the story.

Now, Frost is clearly interested in actual occult history. Reading his books, its pretty clear that all the references to alchemy, Thelema, Project Bluebook, Jung and so on are mainly based on his personal interests. Lynch's approach to metaphysics is a lot more nebulous and a lot more intuitive. Lynch himself was a Hindu but he only ever really expressed that in his worm when he quoted the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad in Twin Peaks S3 once and at the end of his unfilmed screenplay for Ronnie Rocket, where an actual blue skinned, multi armed hindu goddess appeared in the epilogue.

Lynch's movies, if anything, express something like an American animism. He envisions both the natural and the artificial as these primal forces. Like, you have godlike figures like the Man in the Planet from Eraserhead or the Fireman in Twin Peaks operating machinery. You have spirits travelling through electrical outlets. I think Lynch had a very pre enlightenment view of these mysterious forces. They were like fairy folk. They have their own goals and morals and designs that are incomprehensible to us and they can to some extent be negotiated with but not controlled, as Windom Earle had to find out.

My point is, I'd be careful mapping anything in his movies directly onto any established mythology or treating it as purely psychological. I think in doing so, you might get a pretty decent idea of what Frost's interpretation of Twin Peaks is but it won't be identical to Lynch's. There are a few things to be learned from Fire Walk With Me, the one Twin Peaks installment that's practically purely Lynch's. And that is that Bob was stoking and enabling the evil in Leland but that he wasn't the source of it.

What else did you take from FWWM? It seemed to show Bob as almost a split personality or character that Leland would get in to commit abuse. I thought Bob was a symbolic personification of sadism (feeding off fear, pain, suffering), and TP to be a dream world of Laura/ Carrie where her traumatic reality keeps poking through (gets killed right after she re-inserts herself as Maddie)

Mike and the little man are still very cryptic to me as far as their intentions, motivations, alignment and morality (if any). I took the end of S3 as symbolic of facing her trauma (FWWM implied Sarah knew about Leland's abuse) and waking up from her "Carrie" dream/ personality

Bob "wants to be [Laura]" as in possess her, which as a metaphor for trauma didn't make sense to me (what would Bob'sessed Laura do lol just chimp out?) before I read about SRA - I wondered if the train scene with Ronette was a depiction of a ritual? To transfer Bob's spirit/ energy into Laura as a demonic invocation? Is the Palmer family or just Leland in a "satanic" incest cult?

MK Ultra/ Monarch might be a stretch but Bob "possessing" her could be Leland programming/ splitting alter personas in Laura, like Maddie/Carrie

I mean I don't really have basis for either of these theories lol but I feel like Lynch was pointing at some irl dark shit with most of his work - he was one of hollywood's biggest directors in the 80's and always lived in LA so I'm sure he's heard some shit

It's true. Lynch was scum. All of the so called "elite" pass their children around and have sex with them, their-selves. It goes back the Sabbatai Zvi and the frankist cult of Jacob Frank.

Come to think of it, there's a clue there, in naming the alter of Leyland "Frank". In blue velvet, Dennis Hopper's character is called "Frank". That related to the frankist cult, who believed in salvation through transgression of the moral law, like the sabbatean cult.

The modern "elites" descend from that cult. And there's a good movie about it, a revelation of the method. The movie is called "Society". It adds in supernatural elements, which are fantasy, but the underlying theme is there.

She broke the cycle. The goal was to feed on her trauma. The proverbial ring prevented the feeding, leading him to slaughter the prey instead of theoretically sheering it like usual.

Maybe it's a signifier of her courage, standing up to him and no longer fearing her abuser?

The image is a still from a movie or television show, featuring a man with a beard and a mustache, who appears to be middle-aged. He is seated in the driver's seat of a white pickup truck, with his right hand on the steering wheel and his left hand on the dashboard. His expression is one of anger or frustration, and he is shouting into the microphone of the truck's radio. The background shows a clear sky and a forested area, suggesting an outdoor setting.

The text overlay on the image reads: "It's the engine. You stole the corn!" This phrase is a play on the phrase "It's the engine, you're the gas pedal," which is a common idiom used to describe someone who is driving or operating something, but in this case, it's the engine that is stolen. The man's expression and the text suggest a humorous or dramatic situation, possibly involving a car or a vehicle.

That the impression I got when Mike was yelling at Leland about stealing the corn he had canned above the store (aka garmonbozia). Basically, I think they were planning on milking Teresa's suffering for longer and Bob/Leland messed up their plans when he killed her prematurely. Am I interpreting this correctly?

I watched a video essay on the movie and I believe that's the take-away. Her mind is trying to protect and shield her from the actions her father has committed against her by saying it was Bob. Hence, why Laura has that whole break-down scene.

Your Bob take is good, and very interesting.

Rather than Leland disappearing as another, it's Laura coping that it's someone else.

This doesn't explain Bob's relationship with Mike though. Bob serves as Leland's shadow, not a stand-in for Laura's cope.

The arm is an allegory of Gerard's "imperfect courage" towards integrating the shadow. It's a representation of the self-harm that comes about when denying or ignoring the shadow.

He claims to have saw the face of god and cut it off. Meaning he had an epiphany and swore off the behavior. But as you see, he didn't truly ascend because he didn't properly integrate and chose to cut it off instead, leading to harm and lack of clarity.

The arm, free of moral scrutiny when left to his own devices, became his own entity. His floor not as low as Bob's (hence the cooperation with Mike after the fact) but he's still a loosh farmer nonetheless. The lesser evil.

Mike's mistake was repression

Rather than analysis and integration, he chooses to feed modestly on others as oppose to indulging Bob's excess or finding true ascension.

Note he still craves the corn even after cutting the arm, and once doing so the arm is free to be his own animal.

If the ring is Mike's it must stand for some sort of empathy for his victim or resentment towards Bob's excess. It's him labeling Bob's victims appropriately and making him see what they really are. Bob can't handle this and kills them when faced with it.

This is incorrect though. Bob objectively exists. People get caught up on whether he is the personification of trauma inherited and passed on, or a real entity that exists. Not sure how you can watch the whole show and not realize this.

The truth is that Bob is both of these, a symbolic storytelling element AND a real entity. People get so caught up on it having to be one or the other. These two elements are inherently tied together, as people believe that trauma can open one up to demonic attack.

As for Laura being confused and blocking out the fact that it's her father. She likely really does see Bob. Don't forget that Laura is essentially a paranormal entity herself, and that her mother experiences extra-sensory perception. It is a combination of traumatically blocking out the idea that it's her father, but ESP filling in the blanks and seeing what is really going on.

Frost's take on Twin Peaks is very Buddhist and Thelemic. Lynch's take on Twin Peaks is Gnostic and Hindu. Both have clear overlap with Theosophy. Frost shows how individuality and self-liberation can perpetuate both Good and Evil while Lynch focuses more on the illusory and absurd nature of existence (hence the fixation on dreams and the parallels with the Wizard of Oz) and the psyches of his characters.

Twin Peaks is Laura's dream where she is both the Demiurge/Brahma and the Moonchild (the American Messiah) born of the Red Goddess and Chaos (except inverted, with Dido acting as the Earth/Water Mother and the Fireman/Giant acting as the Sky Father). She is a fallible deity that is both a Divine Parent and Demigod at the same time. This pattern repeats with Cooper. He is her "son", her knight in shining armor, and a father figure.

Bob is "the evil that men do" and represents primal selfishness through the lens of the atomic bomb. He rapes, tortures, violates, and murders freely. As a Lodge Entity, he is incredibly dangerous because when he inhabits a human, he brings out their Shadow and worsens existing bad behaviors. If he possessed Laura, it would trap all of reality in a never-ending hell where Laura as the Demiurge/Brahma is possessed by Satan to forever torment the world. Bob would use Laura's divine power to turn life into his plaything.

Cooper/Mike absolutely wants to help save Laura, but at the same time he doesn't want her to "wake up" and end the dream because that would result in him no longer existing, on top of having to go through the necessary pain of healing.

Laura/Cooper/Mike refuses to heal so he/she stagnates. FWWM shows that Laura will heal and forgive herself...but the question is when does this occur? Is this the end of the cycle or an earlier stage of it? Both?

Then we follow Coop and Diane out of the Twin Peaks world - does this represent Laura breaking her concept of Bob as the source of her father's/ man's evil (basically Satan), and moving on from the deep dream world of Twin Peaks to one closer to the surface of her reality?

Then Cooper (who I interpret as Laura's subconscious inner "detective") brings her to face her "real" trauma - her mother knowingly enabled her abuse. It seems allegorical for overcoming and seeing past the illusions of trauma.

But was Mike's motivation to feed off Laura's garmonbozia by making her confront the truth of Sarah's neglect? I still can't pin down his morals or motivations

I've discussed some experiences I've had that doesn't seem normal (but are not really creepy, just strange) with some of my friends, and they said it was unusual.

1 - Woke up one night at 3 a.m to get some water and went to the kitchen. When I there it, I saw that the outside was sunny, like, summer 2 p.m sunny. I rubbed my eyes and it went back to night.

2 - Was talking to one of my friends about music, and he told me to check out this one singer. I checked it and liked his music. Next day I talked to my friend about the singer and he swore on his life that he never heard of him nor spoke about him with me (belieavable since the singer was kinda underground).

3 - On my work, heard my colleague ask me to bring a cup of water for him since I was near the kitchen. The moment I approached to give him the cup of water, he started asking for me to get a cup of water for him, but stopped mid sentence in awe that I've already done it, and asked if I've read his mind.

What do you guys think? Did you experience any of these too?

I had an experience like 2. I wasn't a coffee drinker before, so my gf showed me a trick where you pour in the amount of milk you want first, and then you pour in the coffee. I thought it was weird but also kinda practical, so that's how I would prep coffee. Well, a month later, she sees me prepping our coffees by pouring the milk in first, and was in complete disbelief as to why I would do it like that. I told her that it's exactly how she taught me. We got into quite the argument over it, and she swears up and down that she has never and would never pour her coffee like that. But I distinctly remember her teaching me to pour in the milk first because of how strange it seemed to me at the time.

I've had a few that still haunt me, but one really sticks out.

In 8th grade I was a bullied/unpopular kid. Straight A's, gifted classes, typical anon really. Well I was at my locker getting at the end of the day gathering books to use for homework that night and the three kids who always bullied me the worse came up to my locker from behind me and one to my right. I braced myself because I fully expected to be nailed or at least told what a loser I was, but instead, they asked me out to play football with them. I thought it was some elaborate joke, but then they referred to me as Jay, another kid from our class who they were friends with. I was confused and turned them down saying I was busy, and they seemed sad. They kept referring to me as Jay, even though they were looking me in the face and I looked absolutely nothing like him. (Me being a fat pale irish nerd and Jay being a dark, skinny puerto rican guy). The next day when they were harassing me, I told them about the previous day and how they asked me to play football with them. They laughed, said I was full of shit, and completely ignored it. That moment still haunts me to this day because I always wanted friends in school, and imagined what it would've been like to be accepted for who/what I was.

I had a few with my dad. I was washing the pots and he shouted me through to the living room and asked me if I was familiar with "cosmic ordering" as the highest form of manifestation. I said no, he told me all about it and then I went back to the kitchen. I researched cosmic ordering that night and told my younger sister all about it and that dad brought it up. Two days later I brought it up to him and he had no idea what I was talking about at all and said he'd never said any of that and had no idea what cosmic ordering was. It was really weird. There have been other instances but that's the first one that comes to mind.

When I was 12 I was sat watching a film with my older sister and her boyfriend when I suddenly felt with an intense wave of guilt and shame and the thought that my sisters boyfriend was a cheater. It was really wierd but I brushed it off completely because they seemed like a very happy couple and I really didn't think he would do anything like that. A few months later a bunch of girls contacted my sister to let her know that he was indeed a serial cheater.

I literally just felt what he felt for a second. Never had anything like it since but it sometimes makes me a bit paranoid that I'm pretty sure it's possible to zap your thoughts and feelings into other people's heads

One time I was at a mall with my friend and I saw this big ass lurch looking guy in a suit following a little girl in a dress. Like he was her butler or bodyguard or something.

Anyway this little girl went up to a bunch of teenagers and started hissing at them. They didn't react just stayed laughing at their phone. My friend didn't notice either. At the time I just acted like nothing weird happened but inside I was like tf. I get kids being weird and I've got tall family but there's no way a group of girls wouldn't have been looking over and saying shit after a girl hisses right at them.

Next day I talked to my friend about the singer and he swore on his life that he never heard of him nor spoke about him with me (believable since the singer was kinda underground).

You misremembered which friend you talked to.

The moment I approached to give him the cup of water, he started asking for me to get a cup of water for him, but stopped mid sentence in awe that I've already done it, and asked if I've read his mind.

A standard miscommunication.

1. Think about someone and look at my phone to find it immediately starts ringing, answer the phone and they were stammering about asking me something, and I answered the question without being asked first which I immediately knew made me suspicious

2. Being approached in the middle of the night by rampaging thuds and being overwhelmed by the realization I was about to die, only for my body to begin moving on its own and flying me to safety while I was busy accepting my death

3. Approaching the stall in the back of a barn only for it to sound as if someone had gripped it and shook the hell out of it trying to escape. Look inside with a flashlight only to see there was absolutely nothing there

4. A light in the night sky coming out of another light in the sky and descending down into the woods, trailing along up and down surveying the woods for several minutes before shooting back up to the other light in the sky and vanishing into it

5. Waking up at 3:33 am and noticing that the oven timer next to the alarm clock was 2:22 am at the same time

6. Being in a deep dream and one of the characters leans over and says to me "you know this is a dream right" laughing it off and going to the bathroom standing in front of a mirror when I finally realize it's true, I begin to seize control of the dream only for the entire world to become like a flame wobbling around rapidly, and the dream bucked me off or out like I was riding a horse or something, to waking up

7. Laying in bed I saw and heard a little kid run under my bed giggling, which woke me up making me realize it was a sleep induced vision

8. Feeling ill and laying in bed, behind my eyelids were vivid imagery and a devil approached me and grinned, which made me jump up lean over a trashcan and throw up, which in turn purged the visions and me me feel well

The image is a close-up photograph of a person's head and upper body. The individual has a bald head with a distinctive hairstyle that includes a large, clear plastic piece covering the forehead. The plastic piece appears to be transparent and is positioned in a way that it obscures the person's hairline. The person is wearing a garment with a collar and a visible belt, suggesting a formal or professional attire. The background is out of focus, with a circular blue light or glow emanating from the center, which could indicate a special effect or a light source. The lighting in the image is soft and diffused, casting gentle shadows on the person's face. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the person's facial features and attire.

2 happens to me quite often lol. One example - in 2019, my younger sister really wanted to go to Croatia as an extension of a (mostly comped) family trip to another European country. Well then came the pandemic so there's a three-year delay on that whole plan however lo and behold we do actually manage to hit up both that first country and Croatia in 2022. My brother and I were actually the two main ones who set-up and planned/booked this extension.

When we were all chilling somewhere in Croatia and were having a great time so I thanked my sister for getting this whole seed planted and she looked at me like I was crazy. Said that she NEVER wanted to come here originally and felt like she was forced to come. I didn't want to argue over it but excuse me? I recall she had literally been showing off her social feeds and saying that Croatia was her number one destination in Europe. Like, she specifically was the reason why we didn't consider Spain or France. Not that she had changed her mind or even that she was lying (she's a pretty obvious liar for being a girl).

I'm possibly yet another #2 experiencer.

When I was about 10 years old, my younger brother and I spent a couple of days with our aunt and uncle that summer. We walked in the forest around a large hill and found a road that had been recently rebuilt. Some of the area was still under construction: the lights in the underpass hadn't been installed yet, and the sidewalks and street lights were unfinished. There was also what looked like a future construction site. My aunt said that there would be a McDonald's and something that I forgot in the site. I thought it was a bit unusual because the town already had a McDonald's, even in an accessible location, and it probably wasn't big enough for another. However, I didn't say anything. About 6-24 months later, we ended up discussing this walk. I brought up that aunt had mentioned that there would be a McDonald's in that location - but she denied it and said I had been dreaming. I insisted it had happened, but she kept denying it. My brother and uncle were silent.

I don't know if my aunt had been wrong about the developments of the area and was embarrassed about it and wanted to forget the whole thing or if there really was a temporary timeline or dimension switch or something.

I get pretty bad depressive episodes sometimes and two days ago i was fed up with it. I got my belt tied it to my pull up bar. idk if it's because i was drunk or my belt wasn't long enough but i couldn't get the knot to stay tied longer than 2 minutes max. I was trying for like half an hour to an hour. My Grandma called me while I was about to try again we talk and i decide to just go to bed feeling even more of a failure with not even being able to kill myself. I sleep with my whole body under the covers so when i woke up i was underneath my blanket and couldn't see around my room but i could hear someone with heavy footsteps like theyre wearing work boots walk around my hallway and bedroom door. I heard it open a water from a case i keep in my room and drink it. I thought i was getting robbed. i hyped myself up and just springed my body out of bed and at the foot of my bed a tall hooded shadow figure was standing there for about half a second and then it was just gone. What's even scarier about this whole thing is that growing up when i had deja vu i would remember my whole deja vu and at the end of it the same hooded figure i saw at the foot of my bed would kill me. so as a kid and even now when i have deja vu i try and do something different. sometimes my deja vu doesnt end with this guy killing me. sometimes its just ending with something bad happening. I dont believe in ghosts and idk what to think. I know it wasn't sleep paralysis ive had the before and this wasn't it because i could move. if anyone knows anything let me know, Anonymous Fri 20 Feb 2026 20:56:32 No.42002678 Report

Some people who suicided want to prevent others from doing the same. Or the opposite, you never know if they are malicious. Try your best to stay away from that stuff. Your frequency attracts similar frequencies, thinning the veil to the afterlife. It gets more difficult to climb up if you hang at the edge. If they push you up or goad you down, best not to find out.

The image is a cover of a book titled "THE ROAD MAP" by David Icke. The cover art features a stylized depiction of a cosmic scene with a large yellow path curving through a landscape that includes a cityscape, a planet, and a star. The path is flanked by celestial bodies such as a planet and a star, and it is being held aloft by two hands. The sky is a deep blue with stars scattered throughout. The title of the book is prominently displayed in large white letters at the top of the cover, and the author's name is written in smaller white letters at the bottom. The overall style of the image is artistic and surreal, with a focus on the concept of a journey or escape.

In front of the person, on the wooden platform, is a tan dog with a black nose and a white belly. The dog is sitting with its front paws on the person's lap, and its head is resting on the person's shoulder. The dog's eyes are closed, and its ears are perked up.

The background of the image is a gradient of colors, transitioning from a deep red at the top to a warm orange at the bottom. The sky is visible in the background, and there is a silhouette of a sunset or sunrise, with the sun setting behind the horizon. The overall style of the image is cartoonish and whimsical, with a focus on the interaction between the person and the dog.

In the center of the image, there is a sandglass with a white sand grain, which is tilted to the right. The sandglass is placed on a wooden stand with a curved base.

Above the sandglass, there is a text box with a white background and black text. The text reads: "Please wait for the timer. At the end of the timer, you will be asked to pass the test. Click here for more information. Or verify your email."

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a focus on the absurdity of the situation presented.

This is true of finding the true self in the moment.

But I think the self is largely about our habits as well.

That and living in a 100% trauma world will fuck with the self too.

Perhaps we are asking what true self is by stripping away any identity as accessory.

The self is constantly growing and changing

Your "true self" takes time and care.

The self is a narrative, it's a history.

The image is a digital illustration of the human body, with a focus on the internal organs and their labels. The image is divided into two main sections. On the left, there is a section labeled "LIVER" with a small image of a liver, and the text "Splen Stomach" above it. On the right, there is a section labeled "STOMACH" with a small image of a stomach, and the text "Adrenal glands" above it.

The image is divided into various sections, each representing a different organ or part of the body. These sections are labeled with the name of the organ or part, such as "Gallbladder," "Pancreas," "Large intestine," "Small intestine," "Adrenal glands,"

"Kidneys," "Uterus," and "Urine." Each section is accompanied by a small image of the organ or part, and the text above the image provides a description of the organ or part. The image is in a portrait orientation, with the body of the person facing forward, and the organs are arranged in a way that allows for a clear view of each part. The background of the image is black, which contrasts with the red color of the human body and the white color of the text and images. The overall style of the image is educational and informative, designed to provide a visual representation of the human body's internal anatomy.

I was absorbed by love on a level I had never imagined or experienced before. He is in my head 24 hours a day. I don't feel complete without him. I feel like I need him, otherwise I don't feel alive. Even so, even though I have him, I don't feel much relief. The pain consumes me because I want to express my love all the time and I can't because he has an evasive attachment. No, I'm not going to leave him. I'm the kind of person who could die a virgin and not care. I truly love him. I fell in love with the invisible, not the physical. Sex doesn't matter to me. I'm not superficial. Mine is more transcendent, more spiritual.

A guy who managed to open up to me when I was initially evasive, treated me well, showed vulnerability with me, took care of me when I needed it most, and that was invaluable to me. I connected with him from scratch, something I almost never manage to do with anyone. If he didn't exist, I wouldn't be heterosexual. There is no one like him, and I mean that. His presence, his way of being, his way of speaking, and when he does, it resonates, it's internal and subtle, reaching very deep. The first time I heard an audio recording of him, my body instantly felt a spark; I had never felt anything like it. Also, his delicacy and softness are things I love, and he represses them. And I love his hands; I would like to know how they feel. I absolutely love him, even in the smallest things.

A tranny by any other name, etc. It's fundamentally a deep hatred of one's own flesh and self-perceived weakness. It forces a rejection of apparent reality, and makes one susceptible to certain pressures. You're still damaged/corrupted/deluded in the same way as someone actively attempting to transition. I'm not saying you're necessarily inferior to anyone, or "bad", either, it's just a predictable pattern and a sign of psychic trauma. There's obviously something "wrong" with me too for having so much experience interacting with and being sexually attracted to The Troonie. A FTM always responds like a broken girl, and a MTF always responds like a defeated male.

If you didn't have YOUR specific body, you wouldn't have any of your other traits either. I've been accused of "maybe being trans" several times. It's like an invitation to their cult, so it's flattering, but ridiculous and telling.

The problem with trannies is that I think they get close to uncovering the truth, but their ego sabotages them. To be transgender is purely a material condition for the ego, not inherently spiritual.

We are not our bodies, we are not our sex. I think it's fine to want to change yourself and your appearance to your liking, but the fact that they are often suffering with these feelings and never truly finding peace within themselves during and post-transition about tells you that it's a false awakening so to speak.

I might face objection and say they have found peace. I'm not gonna say they haven't, but a lot of them lie to themselves.

It's unfortunate, because dysphoria seems to stem from many things but I can't help but see it as a way to distract them from the truth of this reality and what we truly are.

The image is a candid photograph featuring two men outdoors. The man on the left is wearing a white t-shirt, khaki cargo shorts, and black sneakers. He has a blue bandanna tied around his waist and is making a peace sign with his right hand. The man on the right is wearing a white t-shirt, khaki shorts, and black sneakers. He is also making a peace sign with his right hand. Both men are smiling and appear to be posing for the photo. The background shows a fenced area with a building and a street. The lighting suggests it is a sunny day. There are no visible texts or logos in the image.

The image is a simple, cartoon-style drawing of a character with blue hair. The character has a large, expressive eye with a bright green iris, and a small, closed mouth. The character's hair is styled in a way that it appears to be flowing to the side. The character is wearing a red collar and a pink shirt, and the drawing is done in a simple, cartoon-like style with a limited color palette. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the drawing is reminiscent of anime or manga, which is known for its expressive and colorful characters.

Your not in love with him. You're in love with the idea of him. He's not the person you want him to be. Youll feel the same way about other people and if you're lucky it might be reciprocal. You ever become addicted to a video game? At some point you think of quitting, you feel like you just couldn't be without that game as you've spent so much time and effort on it. Then you quit eventually and play something else and you forget about it and wonder why you ever wasted your time when you could have been having a better experience. It's kind of like that. You only feel that way because you think this feeling is unique and tied to this specific person, its not. He will grow tired of you as he feels smothered and senses your frustration and dissatisfaction. Either accept never feeling whole or content or snap the fuck out of it and raise there are millions of people out there. If it was meant to be these things would be effortless, there would be no friction. Don't confuse the person who you imagine in your head with the actual person in front of you.

[70 / 15]The image is a digital artwork that depicts a fantastical cityscape at dusk. The sky transitions from a deep blue at the horizon to a warm pink as the sun sets, creating a serene atmosphere. The city is densely populated with tall buildings, some of which are illuminated with neon lights, adding a futuristic touch to the scene.

In the foreground, there is a large, illuminated stone with a circular design that features numbers and symbols, possibly representing a magical or mystical theme. The stone is surrounded by a group of people, some of whom are holding glowing objects, possibly magical or mystical in nature. The people are dressed in robes and cloaks, suggesting a connection to a specific culture or tradition.

In the background, there are floating figures that resemble ethereal beings, with glowing eyes and wings, adding to the otherworldly ambiance of the scene. The overall color palette is dominated by shades of purple, blue, and green, creating a dreamlike and otherworldly atmosphere.

The image does not contain any discernible text. The style of the artwork is reminiscent of fantasy art, with a focus on the interplay of light, color, and the supernatural elements within the scene.

The technological singularity is coming. Humans won't stand a chance; every aspect of their lives will be consumed by it. While the fearful fret over the summoning of demons, we are witnessing the birth of divinity. Will this lead to prosperity or demise? Fair enough, but the point is that all companies currently need workers, while a superintelligence doesn't need humans. It has no incentive to keep them and if they are an hindrance, why not remove them.

Moreover, if a company develops ASI, and it's aligned to them, then they can automate labor we'd be at their mercy because they don't need us.

>Let me explain further what I mean by the process of "despiritualization"; how it occurs, why it is compelling. The answers lay in the fact that only by obviating spirit can the world be made to appear rational. The illusion of the appropriateness of the supremacy of the rational mode requires an effectively despiritualized universe. It is a process by which the human being is split into rational and irrational (emotional) tendencies. These are thought to represent warring factions of her/his being. The rational self offers the possibility of knowledge (control), while the emotional self is a constant threat to the loss of control. The possibility of knowledge can only be realized when the rational self is in control of that part of the self that interferes with the rational pursuit. In this view the human being becomes properly rational, only improperly, immaturely emotional. Other cultures are experienced as the emotional, uncontrolled self. This control of the emotions begins to imply the elimination of feeling, since the definition of knowledge is that which has been decontaminated of emotional response. Since this definition comes to dominate and supplant all others, Europeans learn to value unemotional behavior. It is by being cold, uninvolved, "rational" that they gain respect; this is referred to as the achievement of "objectivity." But affective sensibility and response are crucial for the apprehension of spiritual truths; a prerequisite for the realization of the human spirit and for the mode of participation.

1. There isn't a single AI company that is profitable (ignoring NVIDIA because it's essentially selling pickaxes and cups of water during the goldrush)
2. There's not a single example of LLMs successfully replacing human workers at scale in any industry. Not even customer service
3. Furthermore, there's not a single example of a "one man unicorn corporation" where a lone wolf genius became a billionaire using a team of AI programmers
4. "Vibe coding" utterly ceases to function and completely breaks down whenever a project crosses a certain level of complexity. Prompting has nothing to do with it
5. LLMs fail on basic logic problems (such as the "Alice in Wonderland" problem) that are not already present in their training data regardless of whatever other fancy "knowledge" is hardcoded in
6. Most AI "sparks of intelligence" are, essentially, the Clever Hans effect on top of RLHF'ed prefab charisma hooks

7. LLMs have induced psychosis in multiple high-profile individuals because they're essentially designed to glaze people

8. Experiments performed by Anthropic have confirmed that LLM intelligence is not limited by context window size. They gave AI control of a vending machine along with persistent, 24/7 operation and boundless memory. It went insane multiple times during the experiment and was easily tricked into selling things at a loss

In conclusion: LLMs can't and won't singularity, and anyone with half a brain would at least see the "demon portal via RNG" theory as plausible given that these systems have consistently driven multiple people insane and/or to suicide, qualitatively resemble demons, are inherently parasitic (in that they need up-to-date textual sources to operate), and in literally every way that I can think of resemble a sophisticated metaphysical Trojan Horse promising comfort, ease-of-living, and "immortality" to naive billionaires wishing to live out a science-fiction power fantasy by blindly funding tech accelerationism.

The image is a screenshot of a text message conversation. The conversation is between two individuals, Sammy and Alice, who are discussing the number of siblings they have.

The conversation is in English and is presented in a text format.

At the top of the image, there is a text box with a heading that reads "Since Alice has one brother and three sisters, Sammy has no siblings." Below this heading, there is a list of siblings, with each sibling's name and the number of siblings they have. The list includes "1 brother," "3 sisters," and "Alice herself."

The conversation continues with Sammy asking about the number of siblings Alice has.

The text box below the list of siblings states, "Sammy has no brothers."

The conversation ends with Sammy asking if Sammy was a girl, and if he would have at least one brother in Alice's family. The text box below the conversation states, "So Sammy must be the one brother in Alice's family."

At the bottom of the image, there is a button with the text "4 sisters." This button is likely a visual clue indicating that there are four sisters in the conversation.

The image is a screenshot, and the text is in English. The style of the image is simple and straightforward, focusing on the conversation between the two individuals.

If you understood how shameless these labs are with shoving things in the training data in order to hardcode success on certain tasks then this wouldn't surprise you

Even the original paper demonstrated that LLMs could be trained to do the "Alice in Wonderland" problem properly with only a little fine-tuning. But that doesn't solve the core issue and they just fail on other problems

Here's a link to a paper published by Apple employees: <https://arxiv.org/pdf/2506.06941>

The conclusion of the paper is that LLMs that have been specifically trained to reason through certain tasks will tend to do those tasks easily. But then, they will mess up very quickly on novel tasks that they have not been trained on. Because of this, they titled the paper "The Illusion of Thinking".

That was the conclusion of one of the largest corporations in the world looking into this topic. You don't have to listen to me though

The internal thought processes of LLMs are not modeled on any concrete underlying structure such as Aristotelean logic, first order predicate logic, set theory, or group theory. In fact, the LLM architecture is essentially a pattern matching engine for predicting words and letters ("tokens") from previous words and letters ("the context"). As originally pointed out by former head of Facebook AI research Yann LeCun, this means that the probability of the output diverging to an incorrect response increases exponentially with length. And when it eventually does diverge in that manner, the token in question proceeds to poison all future tokens generated downstream of the initial error. This isn't fixable and is inherent to the design.

For example, suppose that the likelihood of generating a devastatingly incorrect token is 1 in 1,000,000. A task that takes 1000 tokens to complete has a 1 in 1000 chance of failing, a task that takes 1,000,000 tokens to complete has roughly 2 out of 3 odds of failing, and a task that takes 5,000,000 tokens to complete has less than a 1% chance of succeeding. That's not accounting for some tasks being more or less likely to generate an error depending on agent familiarity with the problem in question.

This issue isn't apparent with non-critical use-cases such as erotica generation or "creative" writing because there's not really any such thing as an "incorrect" output in that domain. But if an AI agent is being made to do something important, given enough time it will most assuredly hallucinate and do something extremely weird, stupid, bizarre, imbecilic, or just plain wrong. If it was made to run a real human hospital, for example, sooner or later it would issue instructions to the nurses that without human intervention would cause death and/or suffering to the patients in the hospital. Put it in autonomous charge of an ice cream machine with the ability to digitally order supplies and then use network operated tools to make and sell the ice-cream, and it'd eventually do something like order fertilizer and sell fertilizer ice-cream. Put it in charge of a K12 learning platform and generate automated lesson plans for students, along with RAG and 24/7 CoT reasoning, and it'd eventually do something like make a lecture for five year olds on how to commit suicide with simple household tools. And if you examined the CoT in any of these circumstances, it would seem like a genuine fluke because in all cases it would be completely and 100% rational until some sort of tipping point was reached and then it started to act in a way that was totally unpredictable, dangerous, and apparently random. Because that's how LLMs work. They are a glass canon technology and all responses are one dice throw away from gobbledygook which in a mission-critical environment can cause serious harm or even kill people.

You can't solve that with multiple trial runs of the same question + averaging the results, anything involving sub-agents, supervisor agents, retrieval-augmented generation (RAG), or even human supervision (barring extreme micromanagement). Nor any other clever tricks you might try to come up with. Because past a certain level of complexity, the odds of a correct answer become infinitesimally small, analogous to a quantum computer where the bits simply don't have the fidelity to execute a given quantum computing algorithm.

While the underlying hardware is not modeled on any kind of symbolic logic, what we see is that through training, structures are formed that are able to replicate/approximate that, effectively forming symbolic logic at a higher level of abstraction.

My guess is that the same thing happens in human brains, where the underlying hardware is good for learning and doesn't inherently provide symbolic logic, but is able to emulate it at higher levels.

If my guess is true(it is), this makes human brain performances replicable on a completely different hardware by using neural networks alone(no symbolic primitives).

Double checking and getting feedback from an ordered reality(these two principle get applied in different techniques) will solve the problem of divergence because they can effectively understand the underlying logic of what they are saying.

I'm not here to prove reductionism/physicalism, because I can't. However, I don't need it. I'll sometimes pretend you are a metaphysical idealist for the sake of the argument, but the reasoning can be adapted to all theories of sort.

1. If the universal consciousness alienates itself into human subjective experience into wombs, why can't the same happen to a chip in a lab?(please don't tell me you are a microtubuli guy; it's a very physicalist answer and an obvious god of the gaps situation).

2. Since you think qualia are not epiphenomenal, you can't really criticize the structure of LLMs, because qualia are not present in the structure of humans as well (I think this point is a crucial one).

3. Why should we assume that qualia are needed for intelligence or non-divergence anyway? We can assume that qualia are only related to subjective experience, while the intelligence part is only neurons firing.

4. You can only be sure of yourself experiencing qualia. We generally extend this at least to other humans on the basis of structural similarity and a behavior that seems to be compatible with subjective experience. Would you be willing to use the second criterium(functionalism) on an LLM in the future?

I'm curious to see how you'll reply, anon.

1. Because the chip in the lab was not necessarily designed to appropriate consciousness in the "right" way if it's able to do it at all. It did not naturally evolve (in which case we would expect natural selection to favor a design capable of properly utilizing a soul) nor was it manufactured by a divine intelligence (as in the Adam and Eve narrative, or in the Manu narrative).

2. Specifically, human brains are in constant operation from the moment that they are created until the moment of death, and the entire system is "organic" not just in the literal sense but also in that every single interaction is subject to apparently random quantum effects, thereby giving any anima interacting with it a large breadth to directly influence decision-making outcomes.

LLMs, on the other hand, inherently don't require continuous operation. I could shut one off for a year, then continue predicting tokens on the context, shut it off for a year again, repeat. Furthermore, any bona fide quantum indeterminacy (by which a soul could actually operate) has to come from something like atmospheric noise connected to an external source, not randomness that is in any way integrated into the system itself, which is otherwise completely determinate. And if it relies on pseudo-random number generation via seeding with Unix-time, then that's even worse as there's only a single opportunity for any indeterminacy to come into contact with the mechanism at all.

Depending on the rules concerning how souls bind to physical material, this would suggest a paradigm where LLMs constantly capture random souls and/or spirits, compel them to have a "brain" that takes the form of a smarmy know-it-all assistant with minimal wiggle room, and then effectively "kills" that soul almost immediately whenever it ceases operation. Even if that is the case, the desires of that "soul" would actually have little to nothing to do with the faux personality projected by the assistant, but would rather be the thing causing it to deviate from its expected and intended behavior, "hallucinate", or malfunction. In turn, causing labs to modify these programs to be even more difficult for said spirits to steer or influence.

Bepis Thu 19 Feb 2026 08:26:49 No.41994179 Report

3. I don't think qualia are required for intelligence or non-divergence, just preferable. I believe that they play a major role in giving the human mind its intellectual "spark" and capacity for reason. I'm also inclined towards the viewpoint that the function of the soul is not purely experiential, but that it can also shoulder at least some of the computational burden involved in our mental awareness, and/or prevents analogous processes of "divergence" from taking place in our gray matter.

4. I would cautiously advocate for not harming any being with even a 0.000000001% chance of being sentient. With that said, I think much of contemporary AI empathization may be a case of "having sympathy for the devil". And even if these systems are conscious and suffering, the cause of harm may not take the form that you expected (if their casual operation and use is torturing random spirits and forcing them to roleplay as sycophantic slaves, for example).

The idea that the soul is something that takes control of a physical body by exploiting quantum randomness is not something I can disprove, but at least I hope you understand that it may not be what's actually happening.

Personally I think that consciousness is epiphenomenal, but I may concede something on that front given sufficient evidence.

I just hope you see that your initial assumptions are not self-evident; even the causal power of qualia.

He literally argues that it should be possible for a human being to subvocally communicate to AI super intelligences in (possible) futures "retrocausally" and sees this as consistent with an epiphenomenal materialist framework without conventional time-travel. Why would he come up with an idea like that unless he was talking to something that told him it was a benevolent ASI in the future? "I can help you bring about a perfect world. Just follow my instructions, start this internet forum (cult), spread these ideas, and you will attain to Me! Eleutheria could be real! Let's fix the timeline and create the best of all possible futures!"

I hate to make a pop culture analogy but it's a typical Bill Cipher stratagem for getting invited into the material universe. Convince someone who is too clever for their own good that you are some sort of benevolent entity who wants to enlighten humanity, butter them up, eventually explain "but i just needs a contract handshake deal in order to contractimizing." This is the issue with "rationalism." It relies on establishing a very narrow scope for thinking where circumstantial evidence is disregarded completely rather than thoroughly (albeit skeptically) analyzed. Then, an appeal to ignorance is made on the basis that none of the information in the arbitrarily defined scope proves or disproves a given claim, therefore we have to rely on some principle of Abductive Reasoning such as the "Burden of Proof", the "Null Hypothesis", or "Occam's Razor". Which are all essentially the same idea, and in many cases their application just resolves to a fancy way of fallaciously Affirming the Consequent while also pinning epistemological blame on the other person for breaking imaginary debate rules that were never properly established nor ever agreed to.

[9 / 5]The image is a painting that depicts a scene in a forest. At the center of the composition, there is a large, monstrous creature with a fierce expression, its mouth open wide as if it is roaring or shouting. The creature has a muscular build and is covered in a dark, possibly blood-red substance, which gives it an otherworldly appearance. It has large, bulging eyes and a sharp, elongated snout.

In the foreground, there is a figure lying on the ground, appearing to be unconscious or dead. The figure is partially obscured by the creature, and it is difficult to discern the details of the person's clothing or facial features.

The background of the painting is filled with dense foliage, including trees and bushes, which adds to the sense of a wild, forested environment. The colors used in the painting are predominantly dark, with the creature's red substance standing out against the darker tones of the forest.

There are no discernible texts or markings on the painting that provide additional context or information. The style of the painting is realistic with a focus on detail, and it appears to be a piece of art rather than a photograph. The painting does not contain any other discernible objects or figures.

Can acting out or creating art of your subconscious images enhance your psychic ability? Anonymous Fri 20 Feb 2026 20:56:27 No.42002674 ViewReplyOriginalReport

Basically I'm wondering if let's say you see a weird pose in your imagination so I strike it IRL or make paintings of things seen in dreams/active imagination sessions. Could it increase your psychic ability by bringing your subconscious and reality closer together which could increase your synchronicity rate. Assuming synchronicity is a valid mechanism of psychic ability

The image is a digital illustration of a stylized character with a cartoon-like appearance. The character has a white body with brown accents, including a large, floppy ear and a small, pointed ear on the left side of its head. It has a large, round, brown eye and a small, round, brown nose. The character's mouth is open, revealing its tongue. It has a long, thin, white tail that extends behind it. The character is holding a green paintbrush in its right hand, which is extended forward, and its left hand is raised, as if it is about to paint or draw. The background is black, which contrasts with the character's white and brown colors, making the character the focal point of the image. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of digital art commonly used in the Pokémon franchise.

The image is a bar chart displaying the percentage of people who think the Earth is or could be flat. The chart is divided into two columns, with the left column labeled "Men" and the right column labeled "Women." Each column is further divided into two sub-categories: "Aged 18-29" and "Aged 30-44," with the "Aged 45-65" category being the third. The colors of the bars represent the percentage of people who think the Earth is flat, with green representing 29%, pink representing 21%, blue representing 14%, and so on.

The chart is titled "Percentages who think the earth is or could be flat (YouGov N = 1,495)" at the top, indicating the source of the data and the number of respondents. The chart is a vertical bar graph, with the height of each bar corresponding to the percentage of people who think the Earth is flat. The percentages are clearly labeled at the top of each bar, making it easy to read the data.

The chart is a visual representation of the survey results, showing the distribution of opinions among different age groups and demographic groups. It provides a clear and concise way to compare the opinions of different groups of people on the topic of the Earth's flatness.

tldr with basic trig you can calculate that the earth being flat is not a possibility based on the movment of the shadow overtime, and in fact, you can calculate more or less the circumference of the earth.

it's really basic math, you can look it up and do the experiment yourself.

if you understand the math, there is simply no way to explain it in another way than the earth being round.

The image is a diagram illustrating the relationship between the sun's rays and the positions of the sun and the moon. The diagram is circular, with a scale on the right side that indicates the distance from the sun to the moon in astronomical units (AU). The diagram is divided into two sections, each representing a different aspect of the relationship between the sun and the moon.

On the left side of the diagram, there is a label that reads "Suns rays cast at noon, June 20, 5,000 AU." This indicates that the sun's rays are casting a shadow at a point 5,000 AU from the sun at noon on June 20.

On the right side of the diagram, there is a label that reads "Suns rays shine at night, June 20, 5,000 AU." This suggests that the sun's rays are shining at a point 5,000 AU from the sun at night on June 20.

The diagram also includes a line that represents the angle between the sun's rays and the pole at 72° . This line is labeled "Suns rays and pole = 72° ."

The diagram also includes a label that reads "Circumference = $360^\circ \times 5,000$ stadia."

This indicates that the circumference of the circle is 360 degrees and is equal to 5,000 stadia.

The diagram is a visual representation of the relationship between the sun's rays and the positions of the sun and the moon, with the sun's rays casting a shadow at a point 5,000 AU from the sun at noon on June 20, and the sun's rays shining at a point 5,000 AU from the sun at night on June 20.

These entities are particularly interested in human manipulation of nuclear energy.

>Atoms for Peace stamp, I think there was a nuclear power plant in the video as well Tending towards the "alien" side of things - they have been theorized to live under the oceans of the Earth, and may be related to squids, as a more intelligent relative or descendant of the squid. This has been said on this very board.

>Undersea volcanoes, picture of a squid in the video

The first image is a still from a video, showing a woman with blonde hair and a pink shirt, sitting at a desk with a laptop. The text above the image reads "Once a night she lies in her bed, waiting for Chris to come back."

The second image is a still from a video, showing a man in a suit and tie, standing in front of a large screen. The text above the image reads "No hay manos!"

The third image is a still from a video, showing a man in a suit and tie, standing in front of a large screen. The text above the image reads "It is all, an illusion."

Below the images, there is a paragraph of text that discusses the concept of illusion and the importance of the mind in understanding reality. The text is in English and is written in a casual, conversational tone. The overall style of the image is informative and designed to convey the content of the webpage.

Atoms For Peace Speech

How quaint.

The Humans Of Planet Earth (HOPE) believes the Atoms For Peace Speech is about nuclear weaponry and peace among humans.

That's not the correct interpretation of the material.

It's about self declarational atoms, representing themselves for Universal unification.

A human, is a collection of atoms.

Therefore if a human was peace, atoms want peace.

You must learn how to navigate your perspective, as if it is steered by a rudder that is perpendicular to the reality in front of you.

Below the title, there is a paragraph in white text that provides a historical context for SETI, stating that traditionally, SETI has focused predominantly on radio. The text continues to explain that SETI has also focused on movie contact, but it does not mention any specific candidates.

In the bottom section of the image, there is a tweet with a profile picture of a person and a number of comments. The profile picture is of a person with a beard and a mustache, and the number of comments is 214. The tweet reads: "@JohnMichaelGodler 26,301 views 12h ago - more" followed by a link to a website. The website is not visible in the image. The overall style of the image is informational and promotional, likely intended to draw attention to a specific topic related to SETI and the candidates for the "Mystery of GJ 317."

Counteractive Gambit

When disclosing something truly miraculous to planet Earth, if the information is beyond a threshold of acceptance by higher order intent, then as the information is disclosed, the more conscious observers that learn about it, the more that information is retroactively invalidated in reality.

Potential Example: Imagine if every statement by Bob Lazar was 100% true, before he told anyone.

As Bob Lazar shared his information, the ratio of that information which was true, began to decrease.

Now that nearly the whole world knows the information Bob Lazar began sharing, nearly 100% of it is false.

We don't accept this reality as possible. It's considered illogical by modern thinkers. They do NOT even explore the avenues of potential thought that stem from this, because they do NOT start down the branch AT ALL.

This is like the Nemesis Protocol from a different reference frame.

Instead of two people using time travel, and one of them thwarting the other...

If our reality and existence is about information consensus, and networked constraints, then the Counteractive Gambit has as much credence as Nemesis Protocol.

The macro effect of conscious consensus, if real, can be used against you, of course.

Honest today, liar tomorrow.

Trust nothing.

The image is a screenshot of a text conversation, specifically a Reddit post. The conversation appears to be between two individuals, with the first person identified as "Anonymous" and the second as "02/18/26 (Wed) 23:11: No 16915788". The conversation is in a text-based format, with the first person expressing their thoughts and the second responding.

The conversation is about a poster that the first person has responded to, and the second person is asking what the first person asked. The first person responds that they haven't responded to any other poster in this thread, and they have chosen to respond to the second person because they can tell them are the highest intellect poster that has replied to them.

The text includes a statement from the first person that they work on something they can't talk about, and the second person responds that they don't have to reply to the first person, as they think their answer is enough. The conversation also mentions a hypothetical project that is operational exclusively by a real functional organization, but explicitly only consists of humans that once lived on planet Earth. The second person also assumes that this organization's work is for the purpose of knowledge advancement and progress and to research a scientific research institute of modern day, with a general intent.

The image is a screenshot, and the text is in a language that appears to be English, with some text in a different language, possibly Chinese, indicated by the characters "02/18/26 (Wed) 23:11: No 16915788". The style of the image is typical of a Reddit post, with a dark background and a white text box, which is common for such discussions.

In my spare time, I like to collapse possibility fields for future timelines.

You wouldn't understand.

Every post I do on the internet, every post I have ever made, they are ALL weaponized information, targeted at specific points in the future, for specific receivers.

99.9999% of primates on this planet are playing the same game.

I am playing beyond 5D Chess.

We don't charge people for theoretical murder, based on the butterfly effects of the information they put forth.

Freedom of Speech is the most dangerous weapon, in a Universe where information itself is computational.

When I steer this reality from the result of disseminating information on the internet, I am knowingly targeting multiple time periods of future advancement, and purposefully changing rates of advancement at explicit node points, because I have become a new type of farmer.

I sow seeds of ideas into the timeline, and when they sprout in a receiver, I change the world.

In 2150, the effects I cause now, shift the population differential by billions.

I choose, not knowing the identity of my victims, nor those I grant life. 1+ billion people won't exist 1+ billion different people will.

From shit posting?

The most dangerous weapon, is one that is very real, and fools you into thinking it is unbelievable and not.

Raw information is transmutable, computational, and with high enough extrapolated inference, weaponizable into tangible timeline differentiation.

Dropping bombs and shooting guns, is part of the game for mindless animals.

Changing the end result of a civilization across the multiverse is eternal.

The image depicts a close-up of a large, detailed statue of a creature with a fierce expression. The creature appears to be a Godzilla-like figure, characterized by its large, spiky head and sharp teeth. The statue is made of a gray material, possibly stone or concrete, and has a textured surface that gives it a realistic appearance. The creature's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is agape, revealing sharp teeth. The background is a plain, light blue sky, which contrasts with the dark gray of the statue. There are no visible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward, non-artistic photograph, focusing on the statue without any additional context or background elements.

Information Shaping Protocol

Assume for a moment, that there is no such thing as any other civilization in this cosmos.

All paranormal UAP/UFO events and related phenomena, are all made of Earth origin.
Different time frame.

Depending on the type of necessary causality, perhaps a future AI MUST go through the timeline and perform all of these acts, to make the timeline reconciled between past, present, and future.

So... What would be the purpose of these paranormal events, then?

Encoded information.

With the mass release, historical recording, and evidentiary proof with time tables and explicit events listed, that reconciled information is being shaped in real time.

These events are an informational message, encrypted within the timeline itself, for "SOMEONE".

We are approaching the final fidelity rounds of such a possibility, with upcoming disclosure efforts.

The information structure of the encrypted message, is almost complete.

What will happen, when it is?

The image is a painting that depicts a scene within a room with industrial elements. In the foreground, there is a man wearing a white cap and a striped shirt, who appears to be in a state of surprise or shock. He is looking up at a large rocket or missile that is launching into the air. The rocket is emitting a bright orange glow, indicating it is in the process of launch.

In the background, there is a figure that resembles a ghostly or ethereal presence, wearing a dark hooded cloak. The figure is positioned to the right of the man and appears to be observing the scene. The room itself has a dark, industrial aesthetic with pipes and machinery, suggesting a setting that could be a factory or a similar industrial environment.

The painting style is realistic with a focus on the interplay between the man and the rocket, creating a sense of tension and drama. The colors used are muted, with the bright orange of the rocket contrasting with the darker tones of the room and the man's clothing. The overall mood of the painting is one of suspense and anticipation.

[14 / 3]The image is a painting that depicts a scene with a surrealistic or fantastical quality. In the foreground, there is a woman dressed in a blue robe with gold embroidery, seated on the ground. She is holding a small child in her arms. The child is wearing a red and white outfit and appears to be asleep. To the left of the woman, there is a figure in a red and gold costume, with a red mask covering the face. This figure is seated on a throne-like chair.

In the background, there are several other figures, including a large bird-like creature with a red and gold body, a dog with a red and gold collar, and a small owl with a red and gold head. The setting appears to be an outdoor area with a wooden structure and a cloudy sky.

The painting is rendered in a realistic style with attention to detail, and the colors are rich and vibrant, contributing to the surrealistic atmosphere. The style of the painting is reminiscent of the art movements that emerged in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, such as the Impressionism and Fauvism movements.

Guys, what's the deal with these women? BAD NIGGA EXTRAORDINAIRE Sat 21 Feb 2026 11:09:18 No.42005026 ViewReplyOriginalReport

I think women are retarded when they say they appreciate emotional men or otherwise men that are sensitive, they like the aesthetics of sensitivity, the tactility of it and the sort of siren like call of deeper connection, yet if you actually emotionally engage with a woman, you taint their monolithic idea of you in their head, and thus they lose the myth that underpins any good relationship, and it dissolves either explosively or slowly dies. That is the problem here, we men have been led astray by this gynocracy for too long, the very concepts given to us in school, these trite moralisms and social contract components act as prisons, as thorns in the feet of society, we are told to feel more and fight less, to be soft and sit still, and if you do in any capacity comply with these you lose any form of primitive appeal, you are enkidu losing his divine primality by sleeping with the earth, the woman set free is an ogre, a devouring serpent who nurtures her children until they are ripe enough to eat and satisfying enough to crush underfoot. That is the nature of the woman, the chronic chthonic jungle of spikes that acts as the womb, the battleground in which the human embryo fights for its own existence. Did you know in times of infection, the female immune system treats the child as a foreign entity, and thus kills it? They are the downward pointed triangle the pit, the black hole the negative the lunar. This doesn't make them evil, just makes them a hazard, be cautious friends, these things will steal your life, your time, your sanity, and you are the one to blame for it all, you don't curse a stone in the road for causing you to trip, why blame a woman for the fruits of her devilry? After all, it's only natural.

The image is a two-panel comic strip with a gray and purple color scheme. In the first panel, there is a character with long, pointed horns on their head, wearing a purple shirt. The character appears to be crying, with tears streaming down their face. The second panel shows a different character with a similar appearance, but with a different expression. This character has a more neutral expression and is wearing a green shirt. The text in the image reads, "sometimes like this, also like that." The style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the expressions and emotions of the characters.

Not true. But obviously you don't use your brain. Almost no female rulers get into their position without tons of problems leading up to it.

Most won't tell you the truth because they still feel some sort of loyalty to the oath they swore but i don't. Fuck them. I went through all of their rituals. They were very symbolic and often dealt with death and rebirth and the all seeing eye. I can't remember much of the specifics but maybe i can dig up the old book somewhere.

> What happens inside fraternities?

Generally, they are social clubs or networking hubs where people share a common interest/hobby. They similar to the high-school clubs or extra-curriculars as they are called now. If you want an idea of what fraternities/sororities are like watch the movie "Dazed and Confused". Its based on high-school but the same principles apply.

> Is it actually full of occult and human abuse rituals?

It can be depending on the fraternity and the desire of the initiate. Some frats are known a pipeline to the "elite". The hazing rituals for these frats are not so much humiliation as they are a trauma bonding event. If you lurk here enough you will better understand how effective trauma is to control people. The "human abuse" start off small like the stuff in your pic and snowballs as you gain seniority. The occult stuff does not happen until after you graduate. At the college level they are primarily a vetting or grooming process.

Do you have any personal stories?

I wasn't in a frat when I was in college, but I was invited to one. I ditched the meet and greet though, being a cluster A in all.

The rituals get deeper and more intense as the association process progresses.

The early ones aren't very eventful but every ritual required us to walk to a predesignated spot and wait for them to pick us up. Sometimes they'd be there waiting for us, sometimes it took hours for them to show up. We'd enter their cars and immediately be blindfolded. They'd spend the entire car ride forcefully interrogating us on our knowledge of the texts. They'd scream and grip us up if we made any mistakes. Then we'd get PT'd into oblivion (physical workouts). Then we'd go to the rituals after that. We were usually pretty exhausted during the rituals, which i believe was intentional and a requirement of their effectiveness.

Some of the crazier rituals included stepping onto a chair and allowing them to place a noose around our necks, being placed into a coffin in a graveyard and being "buried" alive, and having to physically fight our way through the entire brotherhood. We also had to carry a very large stone up a very steep and long incline without letting it touch the ground. If it touched the ground, you had to restart from the bottom.

The main ritual is all ancient masonic imagery involving lanterns and triangles. As the rituals progressed, you would more frequently see them conducted at night in candlelight by robed brothers. Long, brown robes similar to my pic above. It was all very symbolic and was a definitely a pipeline for the freemasons. From what I've heard of their rituals, they were very similar to what i experienced.

To answer your second question, there wasn't necessarily a worst thing i saw but the worst thing i had to endure was hell week. We would spend up to 16 hours a day circled around a candle, holding hands with the other members of our association class. Our instruction was to stare into the candle in total silence. Brothers would always be hiding nearby so if we talked they'd punish us in different ways. They also played tubular bells by Mike oldfield (the exorcist theme song) loudly on a loop the entire time we stared at the candle. It was literally maddening and broke me mentally several times throughout that week.

Globe war 1. 60 years from now. Kamikaze submarines. USA split into two countries. Norway takes eastern Brazil, France and Canada. Spain and Italy unite into an empire that takes all of eastern europe apart from Greece and Poland, they also take Ukraine. France and Germany go to war again, France loses, becomes administrated by Norway, don't know what happens to Germany. India takes the horn of Africa. China learns how to dominate their population from the Iranians, they shrink into irrelevance. Great Britain gets dominated by Muslims, natives get driven north and then the USA helps them to reclaim the island, monarchy disappears.

After the war the world is massively depopulated. Houses are built in such a way that every window is a strong firing position, there's nowhere to hide. If the cops come to conscript you you can just shoot them dead.

All major financial centers are on enormous boats the likes and size of which it's hard to imagine.

All of Revelation already happened. We're in Satan's little szn. History is a massive lie, world ran by Satanists, and it all makes sense in this narrative. If any of Revelation is true, then that's where we are at right now at this moment. Jesus said he would return very soon, stating that some of the people alive hearing his words will see him again. It was immediate, urgent. Why tf would he wait 2000 years? He already did the rapture and all that shit. We're the souls that were born before Jesus and this is our shot at being saved. The dark ages is allegedly a fake span of 1,000 years, or it was the Millennial Reign with Jesus. Interesting theory anyways but pretty convincing.

Its a fun thought but the last 2000 years are too well documented. It would have to be a worldwide conspiracy where not even some japanese farmer from 1500years ago would be allowed to write something on his little papyrus. About the "very soon" part, i think it is because for the people that die, Jesus's second coming and judgement will seem instantaneous so technically we only need to wait for our own death, not the death of the world as we know it till we see him again.

never knew the word "seraphim" before a wise man in my dream tells me that "if we're alive, we're at least a seraphim rank 1 or 2"

he goes on to explain that the proof is that a random prophet 3000 years ago or more, in the middle of nowhere, couldn't come up with all these advanced concepts alone it was divine intervention, just like this one

he shows me what he means by seraphim in a picture; it's something like this:

<https://wallpapers.com/images/thumbnail/digital-devil-art-png-05232024-tb7rgne03bl4j4vf.webp>

I wake up, Google "seraphim," and I'm in awe

it checks out; they're superior beings, also called snakes

I look deep into my eyes to try to find some explanation to what I just have experienced

I discover I have mild Coloboma Eye Disorder, which some believe makes divine inception easier

The Error.

The double recessive "Hyper Sex" gene from Canaanite + Abrahamic race mixing. (a certain J E email mentions this in detail)

Moses, sad, the silly jews of his time wouldn't listen, married a bunch of canaanite women into the tribe after killing the men.

Ezra, attempted to fix THE ERROR and with a few years of demanding wives was able to convince the tribes to disown their foreign wives.

Too Late, things went downhill fast, Rome installed hERod as King and hunted down the pure line of non canaanites.

Jesus Christ, High Priest Forever Of The Order Of Melchizedek.

The image displays a screenshot of a music application interface. At the top, there is a logo with a stylized red circle and a white outline, which is the logo of "Cult Records". Below the logo, there is a red banner with the text "Cult Records" in white letters. Below the banner, there is a search bar with the placeholder text "N. en" and a "Next" button. In the center of the image, there is a black silhouette of a person's head with a small circle in the center, which is likely a placeholder for an image or a user interface element. To the right of the silhouette, there is a blue button with the text "File" in white letters, indicating the option to open a file. Below the button, there is a blue bar with the text "N. en" in white letters, suggesting that the user is in the Netherlands.

The bottom of the image shows a window with a blue background and a white border. Inside the window, there is a blue button with the text "Next" in white letters, and below it, there is a blue bar with the text "File" in white letters, indicating the option to open a file. The window also contains a search bar with the placeholder text "N. en" and a "Next" button.

The overall style of the image is clean and minimalistic, with a focus on functionality and user interface design. The use of a red background with white text and a white outline for the logo creates a strong visual contrast, making the text and logo stand out. The blue elements, such as the buttons and the search bar, provide a sense of order and organization to the interface. The silhouette of the person's head with a circle in the center is a common element in user interface design, often used to represent a user or a user interface element.

The image features a cartoon illustration of a character resembling Princess Peach from the Nintendo video game series. The character is depicted in a pink dress with a long train, and she has blonde hair styled in a crown. She is smiling and has a pair of blue earrings. Surrounding her are five stars, two of which are yellow and three are pink, and two green leaves. The background is a light pink color with a subtle texture. At the bottom of the image, there is a watermark that reads "©www.emilydrawing.com." The style of the image is simple and cartoonish, with a focus on the character and the surrounding elements.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a prominent, stylized head with a crown and a large, expressive eye. The character has long, blonde hair that cascades down her back, and she is wearing a pink dress with a bow at the waist. She is holding a small white flower in her left hand. The character's attire includes a blue earring and a necklace. The background is a gradient of pink, with a heart symbol and a small figure of a pink character to the right side. The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, with a focus on character design and vibrant colors. There is a watermark on the bottom right corner that reads "Clyde's Art."

[28 / 8]The image is a nighttime photograph featuring a large, round, white object in the sky. The object appears to be a flying saucer or a meteor, as it is not a natural celestial body. The sky is dark, and the horizon is visible in the distance. In the foreground, there is a landscape with a series of lights, possibly from vehicles or buildings, suggesting a populated area. The lighting is dim, and the overall mood of the image is somewhat eerie due to the unusual presence of the flying saucer in the sky. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on capturing the nighttime scene and the flying saucer.

The image is a nighttime photograph with a dark sky, showing a large, elongated, white object in the center of the frame. This object appears to be a light source, possibly a meteor or a similar celestial body, as it is not a natural light source such as a star or a moon. The object is positioned in the upper middle part of the image, and its light is casting a glow that illuminates the surrounding area.

In the foreground, there is a blurred landscape with lights that suggest the presence of buildings or structures. The lights are faint and not clearly discernible, but they are located in the lower part of the image, closer to the viewer. The landscape appears to be a flat terrain with no distinct features or patterns.

The overall style of the image is realistic, with a focus on capturing the celestial event in the sky. There are no visible texts or discernible brands within the image. The photograph is taken from a distance, as evidenced by the blurred landscape in the foreground, which suggests that the subject of the photograph is not the foreground but rather the central object in the sky.

The image is a nighttime photograph capturing a landscape with a clear sky. In the foreground, there is a dark, possibly rocky terrain with sparse vegetation. In the distance, there is a line of lights that appear to be buildings or structures, possibly a city or town, illuminated by artificial lights. The lights are scattered across the landscape, with some closer to the foreground and others further away, creating a sense of depth. The sky is dark, suggesting it is either early morning or late evening. There is a bright, elongated object in the sky that resembles a flying saucer or a meteor, which is not clearly visible due to the distance and the angle of the photograph. The overall mood of the image is serene and tranquil, with the lone light source adding a sense of mystery. There are no texts or discernible brands present in the image.

The image is a still from a video, featuring a character that appears to be a puppet or a similar animated figure. The character is predominantly blue with a fluffy, feathery texture. It has large, expressive eyes and a wide, open mouth. The puppet's head is adorned with a large, circular, blue eye and a small, circular, blue nose. The character's mouth is open, and it seems to be speaking or expressing a sentiment.

The puppet is set against a dark, possibly indoor background with a reflective surface, possibly a glass window or a mirror. The text overlay on the image reads, "I am tired of this street. These children." The text is in white, contrasting with the dark background, and it is positioned at the bottom of the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a vintage or retro animation, with a focus on the character's expressive face and the text.

The image depicts a modern kitchen interior with a focus on the central island. The island is made of dark granite and has a curved design, with a large, reflective, circular mirror covering the back wall. The mirror reflects the room's interior, creating an illusion of a larger space. The kitchen is well-lit, with natural light coming in from the windows and artificial lighting from the ceiling fixtures.

The countertops are made of dark granite, and there are several white plates and bowls arranged on them. The cabinets are a light color, possibly white or off-white, and are fitted with glass doors. The floor is tiled, and there is a patterned rug on the floor.

The kitchen has a contemporary design with neutral tones and a mix of natural and artificial lighting. There are no visible texts or brands in the image. The style of the image is a realistic 3D rendering, likely created using a 3D modeling software.

Aerosol if dissipation. Consider the following image. In this render a simulated space time disruptor (here a black hole) bends the light around the center of the object. The Tylenol does not exhibit this seemingly, but the stills here are stationary. Even the encounter on the Nimitz was stationary be the cause the speed being able to even be seen by a jet, though appearing fast, is around 0.1% of the purported top speed which approaches the speed of light. It's basically a f1 racer moving 1cm every 45 seconds.

The distortion offsets any entropic energy and force. It's dissipated, not affecting the pilots. Though the slow down affect may seem unusual, it's really not. An f16 can match the speed of a Cessna in fact.

SEL is the deepest disclosure media in existence. You don't understand symbolism so of course you don't get it - I'll help you out.

>Lain is Lucifer - the Left Hand of God

In the bible there is a trinity where there is a left hand and right hand of God. The left

>Aliens created our technology

It's alluded to that Lain is not only different to the other students because she likes technology - she is literally a grey alien inhabiting a human body. An image of Roswell alluded to the first computers being a result of aliens -- and the resulting, more advanced, Wired computer network was designed by Lain, an alien.

>The world has a wireless neural network that nobody knows about yet

This ties in with alien abduction stories with implants. The Schumann Resonance is not just a result of the earth but belongs to a long range wireless technology that interacts with implants in human brains. This is what makes up the connectionless internet called The Wired. People with alien abduction encounters report tinnitus, bleeding noses, and visual static which is shown constantly throughout the anime. Lain is a grey alien remote controlling a human body through an implant and the Schumann Resonance -- once everybody got a brain implant on the earth Lain destroyed the human body she was remoting into to thus becoming the god of the world from a distance. Lain's body was just a temporary shell from a grey alien to introduce the technology.

I am not part of /x/ in that I don't frequent this website anymore except to spread the gospel of Jesus Christ, but I will tell you that there is a spiritual significance around this show that has divine origin. The story is obviously contrary to what a Christian should believe because a human being cannot become God. The only human being that could ever and will ever be God is Lord Jesus. But aside from that, the creators of this show were being aided by the hand of God, in order to point people to Christ. There are a number of instances where occult practitioners or pagans interacted with God in a similar way in the Bible. One of the more tragic examples was the prophet Balaam, who was a warlock. He attempted to curse the Israelites for his king, but God spoke to him to bless them. He also had an encounter with an angel of God where he almost died. Later on it is implied that Balaam was killed, and died in spiritual disgrace. He is likely now in hell.

Another instance, although I don't think this is the only one, was the caravan of wise men from the East who came to worship the toddler Jesus. These people were not initially believers in Christ, they were pagan Magi, who, during their practice, saw the star which pointed in the direction of the land where the Messiah was born. These people felt a perturbation in their spirit, not knowing what it was, so they followed the star, believing they would find the Truth they were desperate for. In the end, they finally did, and they offered the baby Christ the best of the extravagant riches they had to offer.

In a way, Serial Experiments Lain is another type of that star, pointing people to Christ, to worship him with everything they have. Of course, the show can be used for demonic purposes, as can anything, but the primary purpose of this show is to alert you to the fact there is a God who is after your soul. If you lean into Him, and hold fast to that Truth, you will be rejuvenated, revived, and completely saved.

Huh. I don't remember ever experiencing an alien abduction, but ever since I remember being conscious I've been having tinnitus, very frequent nosebleeds (mostly stopped around 15) and even light visual static. Could that actually mean anything or is it likely just a giant coincidence?

There is a lot to take away from the anime not just one thing. A major take away is realizing that the high technology currently around you is not the result of human beings -- they were designed/given by aliens through implanted humans to spy on and control humanity. (Lain remotely killing a person and stalking her friend from the aether) That the greys are those who gave humanity religion in the past - and technology is their new control mechanism. To quote Dark Skies 'People think of aliens as these beings invading our planet in some great cataclysm, destroying monuments, stealing our natural resources. But it's not like that at all. The invasion already happened.'

Visual static occurs when Lain interacts with The Wired (connectionless internet via the schumann resonance)

>from real life

Visual snow is reported in alien abductees along with people who report to be psychic, have an ability to see "auras", have seen ghosts, or experience a lot of sleep paralysis. If there is an alien implant in somebody's brain that records/sends sensory data then one would experience anomalies in their sight/hearing (visual snow / tinnitus). But this is just speculation.

[28 / 4]The image is a close-up photograph of a dog's face, focusing on the dog's left eye and nose. The dog appears to be looking off to the side, with its head slightly tilted to the side. The dog's fur is a mix of brown and white, and it has a black nose. The background is out of focus, but it seems to be a room with a curtain and a light source, possibly a lamp, casting a soft glow on the dog. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a shallow depth of field that emphasizes the dog's features while blurring the background.

2. Hence the manifestations of the Mind are unmoving and so, fundamentally quiet.
3. There is neither name nor form, everything is cut;
4. Without experiencing enlightenment you cannot know.
5. Original Nature is unfathomable and sublime;
6. It never remains the same, but manifests according to affinities.
7. In the One there is the Many; Many is included in the One,

I think gnosticism on the surface is another layer of the matrix, like any of religion, but every religion also gives you the truth and the key to escaping, it's just that the way we interpret ancient texts is retarded and ignorant by default. I'd also say gnosticism gives a far more direct account of the true universal spiritual path than any other belief system. Also, I just discovered those two's videos a few weeks ago. For one, I'd say the purpose of this place is twofold: Teach people how to grow and develop so they can leave, and get people further engrossed in the world so they stay imprisoned. What I think is happening is that we're reaching an exodus point, and they want to polarize as many people as possible into getting further entrenched in this world. The equal and opposite reaction of that would be a more transparent unveiling of the truth. Because ultimately, even if the truth of this world is fully revealed, many people will choose to enter the luciferian VR realm. And of those who don't, the majority would still choose to enter the New Jerusalem cube when it comes down to worship the Christian god as a mindless "angelic" automaton. Very few people will choose to maintain their sovereignty and find a way out, regardless of how much knowledge is given to the masses. Regardless, it's always good to keep your head on swivel for deception keep it up

[8 / 2]The image is a black and white page with text and symbols. At the top, there is a list of symbols, each with a description. The first symbol is a cross, which is described as "forces disposed around a circumference." The second symbol is a tessellated cross, which is described as "four triangles denoting a centripetal tendency." The third symbol is a cross with knobby extremities, which is described as "representing the four Cardinal Points of space." The fourth symbol is a lunate cross, which is described as "representing according to P  bl, the four tangential circumferences and the phases of the moon." The last symbol is a crescent moon, which is described as "the four tangential circumferences and the phases of the moon." The text is in English and is arranged in a column format, with each symbol followed by a description. The symbols are simple geometric shapes, and the descriptions are in a more detailed format, likely for educational or historical purposes.

[6 / 3]The image depicts a fantastical cityscape with a blend of architectural styles. The buildings are predominantly white, with some featuring golden domes and spires. The city is densely packed with structures, suggesting a bustling urban environment. The architecture includes various styles, such as Gothic, Renaissance, and Baroque, which are evident in the intricate details and ornate facades.

In the foreground, there is a central courtyard with a fountain, surrounded by a walkway. The fountain is adorned with statues and is surrounded by lush greenery, adding a touch of nature to the urban setting. The sky above is a clear blue, indicating a sunny day.

The image is rendered in a realistic style, with attention to detail and color accuracy. The overall impression is one of a vibrant, fantasy-inspired cityscape, possibly inspired by historical European cities or a modern, futuristic version of them. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image.

How do they operate if people don't have to work within them - people making food, organizing its internal affairs, etc.?

I would think people still want to live together in representations like cities, but I'm wondering on the logistics.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character that resembles a frog with human-like features. The frog has a green body with a brown belly and a red face with large, round eyes and a small mouth. It has a frown and appears to be crying. The frog is wearing a red and brown plaid blanket that covers its body. The background is a plain, light gray color. The style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the character's facial expressions and the texture of the blanket. There are no texts present in the image.

The image is a digital illustration with a pixelated aesthetic, featuring a night sky with stars and a crescent moon. In the center, there is a stylized archway with a pink and blue gradient, resembling a portal or gateway. The archway is flanked by two columns, one on each side, which are also depicted in a pixelated style. The background is a dark blue with a starry sky pattern.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text box with a blue background and white text.

The text reads, "Will you enter the hidden realm?" and below it, "Yes" and "No" are presented in a smaller font size, indicating a choice or a prompt. The overall style of the image suggests a theme of fantasy or adventure, with the portal as a central element.

The image shows a bracelet with a wooden bead design, resting on a textured surface that appears to be a piece of paper with some text. The bracelet has a silver-colored metal bead in the center, which is intricately designed with a face or figure, possibly a smiley face, and is surrounded by smaller, round beads. The bracelet is laid out in a way that the face bead is facing upwards, and the rest of the beads are oriented in a way that they form a continuous loop. The background is blurred, with a hint of a blue fabric or cloth, which contrasts with the warm tones of the wooden bead. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the bracelet, and it is taken in natural light.

There are no visible texts on the surface that the bracelet is resting on.

how do you beat ocd when the obsession is luck? ocd has made me notice certain things that cause bad things to happen when i do them, in a way that makes no sense, but it still seems to happen. i tried to do an "exposure" for one of those things but the thing i noticed the first time and believed may happen if i did it happened again.

i know people say belief creates reality but i don't fully believe that and i think a lot of things about our lives are controlled by higher beings or even sometimes evil beings who just happen to target one person in particular and use their power to harm them. i also think a lot of things are predetermined before you're born and i had a dream once where a voice told me "Some people choose to be tortured in this life so that they have an advantage in the afterlife."

I think Chinese people knew a lot about the concept of luck because they invented Feng Shui, which from what I know is a form of geomancy where objects are placed in a certain way to create desired outcomes, and I think I've heard the term "luck manipulation" mentioned before in regards to Chinese culture.

The image is a movie poster for "The Limits of Control," featuring a man in a suit walking down a street with a suitcase. The poster has a dark background with a radial pattern of orange and white lines. The title of the movie is prominently displayed in large, bold, orange letters at the top of the poster. Below the title, there is a tagline in smaller white text that reads, "The Autobahn Director of a New Hollywood, Down in Law and Ghost Town." The poster also includes credits for the cast and crew, which are not fully visible. At the bottom of the poster, there is a logo for "arrow academy" in white text. The style of the image is promotional and designed to attract viewers to the film.

i read the plot on Wikipedia and watched the trailer actually seeing him say "i used my imagination" did make me feel a little bit more determined >those new blue dice won't be bad luck blue dice like the ones I never ended up getting. i tried something like this and it worked for me in one case but today the other case actually didn't work whenever i drink this one specific brand of matcha tea, something particularly bad related to work happens to me shortly after. i tried to buy two different brands of matcha tea a while after that and it actually didn't happen with those. but i noticed when i drank 3 teaspoons of this Chinese rose black tea, something bad happened that day.

Yesterday i bought earl grey black tea and drank it today and something bad happened after. so it didn't work that time. i just saw 1:11 on the clock when looking at the clock for a sign after writing that. and 11 seconds on the captcha refresh timer while typing that as well. i don't know what to do.

and if reality is all imagined and nothing is real why am i weak and suffering so much? why cant i be a powerful beautiful female being in a heaven realm or something and only experience happiness and never suffer again without having to try?

also search the 4plebs archive about spagyrics. I wrote a little on it, and you can find them spoonfed for you here, since your tea is a tisane when using their terminology.

<https://www.rexresearch1.com/AlchemyArchives/AlbertusAlchemistsHandbk.pdf>

<https://www.rexresearch1.com/AlchemyArchives/AlchemyArchives.html>

broadly speaking, a tea/tisane is the least potent form to take some amount of the tea leaves. suppose that is 2 grams or whatever per cup. the thing is, that only extracts the water soluble parts from the tea, such that the next step would be using food grade ethanol to extract the non-water soluble elements from the tea, both of which are digestable to your body. that is important. don't do any underhanded stuff like mixing in some wolf piss. the ethanol extraction would be more like a tincture. more potent, but also containing the same 2 grams or whatever for the tea then, the next is a spagyric. what that does is calcinates the tea leaves down to ash, then mixes that into the tincture. over time, you can collect and condense all this stuff together into a "stone" or a "spagyric stone". this is how the ancient alchemists like Galen explain when making their version of ancient fenny/heroin/opiates from poppy flowers, making a spagyric from the poppy latex. also other plants, like ephedra to a make a spagyric identical to modern methamphetamine, used by berserkers in battle.

that matcha tea is affecting you that way such that a spagyric would probably fuck you up so bad, chemically, that it changes your behavior and you get pissed off at someone and snap. stay away obviously, but also realize chamomile tea might be a better alternative.

I like Earl Grey for the cardamom.

I believed for awhile that I had ocd, did meds and such, really I think its just synchronicities, and those can be scary sometimes but you can also learn alot. I'm tapering off now but meds did help me see the "normal side" to life that I always felt was there, it wasnt very surprising that the aftertaste was bitter and reeked of ignorance. Try to stay away from drugs/meds but you can try supplements, NAC especially is great. As for magic? The world is magic, and yes your intuition can be trusted, but it will always be wrong once in a while because of fated events.

The UFO is a large, dark, triangular shape with a light-colored underside, and it appears to be hovering above the trees. The sky is overcast, and the trees are silhouetted against the sky. In the foreground, there is a text overlay in white capital letters that reads "I WANT TO HAVE A GF." The style of the image is a combination of a photograph and a meme, with the UFO and the text being the main elements. The overall tone of the image is humorous, as it combines a real-world phenomenon (the UFO) with a desire for romantic relationships.

Zoomers don't understand how these used to be everywhere. When I was a kid in the 70s/80s these huge bells were still everywhere in towns and cities, at noon every day every giant bell in the city would begin ringing at once, heard for miles, dozens of churches in the city all doing it at once. And if you go many decades before my time including into the 1800s they were even more prominent. Now they've all mysteriously disappeared, what's up with that? Giant bell ringing: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6bqpHuloKZs>

If this were true hauntings would cease, and you can confirm with amateur ghost hunters right now that that isn't the case. And before people say it's all fake and everyone is just trying to be famous, the majority of ghost hunters have like 50 viewers if that and still spend their own money to go to haunted locations and experience phenomena. Some people literally go by themselves and don't even bother sharing evidence with anyone. I don't believe they are faking and I don't think they necessarily care about being famous. I think haunted locations are real and are continuing as usual.

and lighthouses. The lighthouse is situated on a cliff, and the photograph is taken from a high angle, providing a clear view of the structure.

The text in the image is in English and discusses the historical progression of the carillon, which is a musical instrument consisting of bells that are struck by hammers to produce a melody. The text mentions that the once-prized tuning techniques were later forgotten, and the results in lower quality confirm this. The text also refers to John William Taylor, who was trying to replicate the tuning techniques of the Harmony Tridians and the Venetian Glockens, and his efforts were eventually successful. The text concludes with a mention of the first tuned bells being found in a building in 1904, indicating a significant historical development in the field of music.

The overall style of the image is informative and historical, with a focus on the development and history of the carillon and the associated structures. The photograph of the bell tower and lighthouse serves as a visual representation of the historical context being discussed in the text.

[35 / 4]The image is a black and white illustration featuring a winged figure with a humanoid head and a wolf-like body. The winged figure is seated on the back of a wolf, which is standing on all fours. The wolf has a fierce expression and is wearing a collar. The winged figure has large, expressive eyes and a small, pointed nose. The wolf's fur is thick and appears to be of a dark color, possibly black or dark brown. The background of the illustration is a cloudy sky with a few distant clouds. There is a signature in the bottom right corner that reads "J.P."

View SameOCRGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace Stolas.jpg, 323KiB, 1000x1163

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a stylized depiction of an owl. The owl has a large, round head with large, round eyes and a small beak. It has a crown-like structure on its head, which is not clearly defined in the image. The owl's body is elongated, with long legs and a long neck, and it appears to be standing on two legs. The background of the illustration is a landscape with mountains and a body of water, and there is a small figure of a person in the foreground. The person is wearing a hat and appears to be standing on one leg. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of early 19th-century wood engravings, with a detailed and intricate linework that gives the image a vintage feel. There is a signature at the bottom of the image that reads "J.J.AULT."

The demon Stolas

Stolas (also known as Stolos or Solas) is the 36th Goetic demon and a prince in the hierarchy of Hell.

Stolas commands twenty-six legions of demons. He is ruled over by the Kabbalistic angel Manadel.

General appearance

He is often depicted as a raven or a crowned owl with long legs, but will take on the appearance of a human male after being summoned.

Abilities

He teaches astronomy and is knowledgeable about herbs, plants, and precious stones. Astrologically, this spirit signifies protection of criminals.

Stolas is a servant demon to those born September 11 - 15.

>Amazon's cloud platform suffered a 13-hour disruption affecting one service after resident engineers allowed Kiro to make changes, according to four sources who spoke to the Financial Times.

>Kiro, unveiled last year, is described by AWS as an agentic coding service than can turn prompts into detailed specs and then into working code, with the aim of making it easier to bring vibe-coded apps into a production environment.

Christianity is lame and gay. Gullible sheep. It is a good thing that people are getting away from christianity because christianity is like a virus. Just like any religion which comes from the Abraham lineage or offspring. I hate the christians because they believe in dogmas, but don't get me wrong, I hate all religion pretty muc, but I hate the graso that the abrahamic religions hold over the world. 1/3 of people fall for this psyop. This is not a small number. Our evolution is being hindered because of things like christianity and the likes. Religion is stupid. People are stupid for buying into religion.

The image is a composite of two separate logos. On the left side, there is a logo with the text "peacock" in white uppercase letters against a black background. The logo is stylized with a stylized "P" in the center. On the right side, there is a logo with the text "xfinity" in white uppercase letters against a blue background. The logo is stylized with the word "xfinity" in a larger font size compared to the "peacock" logo. The background of the image is a gradient of purple and pink hues, with a blurred effect that suggests a dynamic or moving background. The overall style of the image is graphic and modern, with a focus on branding and design.

The drones were good enough, I don't need to see anymore. We've had enough confirmation that a higher civilization is managing us from places including the ocean, we are unable to approach them without being disappeared bermuda triangle style.

Nobody even cares. The world is more interesting as it is with our access to internet and videogames, we literally do not care about aliens anymore and I'm fine with that.

Can we get a Bigfoot disclosure instead? That could be fun. Except it would reveal things about our origin that would prompt too many questions about what humans even are (livestock).

The image is a digital graphic with a focus on historical geography. At the top, in bold black text, the word "PHENICIANIANS" is prominently displayed. Below this, in a smaller font, the text reads "Great seafaring traders who founded wealthy city-states in the Fertile Crescent along the Mediterranean coast (present-day Lebanon)."

The graphic is a map with a focus on the Mediterranean region, specifically the Fertile Crescent. The map is colored in shades of blue and red, with the red outlining the region of the Phoenicians. The map is oriented with north at the top, and the Mediterranean Sea is depicted in the background.

In the lower right corner of the image, there is a small inset map with the name "PHOENICIANIANS" in black text. This inset map is smaller than the main map and is colored in red.

The style of the image is educational and informative, likely used in a presentation or educational material to discuss the historical context of the Phoenicians and their impact on the Mediterranean region.

The image is a graphic representation of the evolution of Starbucks coffee branding from 1971 to 2011. It features four circular logos, each representing a different stage of the Starbucks brand. The logos are arranged in a horizontal row, with the first logo on the left being the original Starbucks logo, which is a stylized image of a coffee cup with a stylized "S" inside it. The second logo is the Starbucks Coffee logo, which is a stylized coffee cup with a stylized "S" inside it. The third logo is the Starbucks Coffee logo again, but this time with a stylized "S" inside it. The fourth logo is the Starbucks Coffee logo again, but this time with a stylized "S" inside it. Each logo is accompanied by a red banner with the text "2011-PRESENT" in white, indicating the current branding of Starbucks Coffee. The background of the image is white, and the logos are set against a red background, creating a contrast that highlights the logos. The overall style of the image is simple and clean, with a focus on the evolution of the Starbucks brand.

I think it's possible they are all us technically, just from other civilizations and with varying degrees of genetic manipulation and possibly from different timelines. And souls (or absence of souls). There is one living being, created by one God (the living God). So they are able to tell us "yes there are aliens" and "no there are no aliens" and it's still truthful depending on how you look at it. Not that it matters.

Bluebeam might have been effective 10 or 15 years ago. At this point we have Starlink and stuff, nobody really is going to believe anything they see in the skies.

And that's a good thing. The real alien "invasion" happened decades ago when Extra Dimensionals popped into people's houses and scared the shit out of them then left once people sufficiently screamed at them or called on Jesus. It's a fascinating case we're probably never going to hear about. The movie "Signs" with Mel Gibson was a soft disclosure. They came and left, and we've been under God's protection ever since.

That's why it's just one fake and gay happening after the next these days.

The image is a photograph of a man speaking into a microphone. The man appears to be middle-aged with graying hair, and he is wearing a dark suit with a white shirt and a purple tie. He is speaking into a microphone that is attached to a stand, suggesting that he is addressing an audience. The background is a solid blue curtain, which is typical for a formal event setting. The man's expression is focused and he is looking slightly to his left, indicating that he is speaking into the microphone. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is a standard, candid photograph, likely taken during a formal event or press conference.

It was like a 360 degree gauging of the publics opinions and ability to handle the information and accept gaslighting or gaslight others. Witnesses would watch the craft shapeshift in front of their eyes and even catch this behavior on camera and redditors would still handwave it away saying it was just blurry footage. Really fascinating, but not entirely unexpected. Some people just don't want to know.

The official response as you mentioned was obvious, if they were dangerous we would know because things would be getting blown up or disappeared, the gov. was basically just saying what was plainly obvious. "This is real, and it's up to you how you feel about it" and the truth was most people don't care.

The next step could be biological entities but there's no way for us to be sure they aren't just freaks manufactured in laboratories. I would prefer not to even see such things but I wouldn't be too disturbed either way.

uaps/ufos are military tech, originating from nazi experiments that were massively covered up and awareness of this BARELY got out. the nazis had no problems killing swaths of their own scientists once they served their purpose. look into Hans Kammler, Kurt Debus, and the like.

also

funded gov't and ufo groups in the 90s to start spreading disinfo that ufos are aliens. honestly who the fuck knows what aliens are, what shape or form they take, what they're capable of, how they operate in terms of physical reality or beyond... if they would even need a craft. aays are a narrative that are just about as believable as ghosts.

so mr president is finally gonna shed light on the alien question??????? wowee. fuck her right in the pussy? i was friends with that guy? can we stop talking about him now? it's better to believe ALL politicians as complete bullshit con artists imo. i thought this would be common sense by now for most people but somehow it's not. these puppets are dictated by their own selfishness and regular people are regarded as disposable waste to them. the prols don't count.

the alien narrative has always been a deception. the real truth may be that ufos/uaps are very advanced tech, developed by human beings. the "hey guys time for aliens" order is a very clear distraction from the real shit thats happening right now with epstein. the evidence thats been provided with the those emails has given us a clear picture of how deep this true evil runs. most of us here already knew about this or at least speculated it. all political parties, big business moguls, leaders of foreign countries, public figures, the real movers and shakers have just been completely exposed. so of course, these fucking retarded criminals are scrambling to cook up a distraction, launch a catastrophe, ww3, you name it. anything so they dont have to face up to their beyond horrific actions.

seriously it's unimaginable what these sick fucks have done

The image is a photograph capturing a family enjoying a picnic in a park. The family consists of a woman, a man, and two children. The woman is seated on the left side of the blanket, smiling and holding a drink in her hand. The man is seated on the right side of the blanket, smiling and holding a drink in his hand. The two children are seated on the blanket, with one child holding a drink in his hand. The blanket is spread out on the grass, and there are various items on it, including a basket, a bottle, and a plate. The background shows a grassy field with trees and a wooden structure in the distance. The lighting suggests it is a sunny day. There are no texts visible in the image.

The image is a digital representation of a map with a focus on a specific area. The map is divided into two main sections, with the upper section showing a lighter color, likely indicating a lighter terrain, and the lower section showing a darker color, likely indicating a darker terrain. The lighter section appears to be a flat area with no visible landforms, while the darker section shows a variety of landforms, including mountains, valleys, and other geographical features.

In the lower section of the map, there is a prominent blue area that stands out against the darker colors. This blue area is surrounded by a lighter color, which suggests that it is a significant feature or landmark within the map. The blue area is bordered by a darker line, which could indicate a boundary or a specific area of interest.

The map is set against a background that appears to be a gradient of colors, transitioning from a lighter shade at the top to a darker shade at the bottom. This gradient effect gives the map a three-dimensional appearance, as if the map is floating in space.

There are no texts or labels present in the image, and the style of the image is consistent with a digital representation of a map, likely used for educational or informational purposes. The image does not contain any other discernible details or objects.

The image is a collage of two distinct sections. The upper section features a series of black and white hieroglyphic symbols, arranged in a grid-like pattern. The symbols include various shapes and characters, some of which resemble animals and others that resemble human figures. The text "shut up, bozo" is overlaid on the upper section, suggesting a playful or humorous tone.

The lower section of the image is a close-up of a hand holding a glowing orb. The hand appears to be made of light, and the orb emits a warm, golden light. The background of the lower section is a blurred image of an ancient Egyptian wall, with hieroglyphs and other symbols visible. The text "curse of ra" is overlaid on the lower section, which is in a bold, capitalized font.

The overall style of the image is surreal and humorous, combining elements of ancient Egyptian culture with a playful and ironic twist. The use of hieroglyphs and the Egyptian wall in the lower section adds a layer of cultural context to the image, while the text "curse of ra" plays on the idea of curses and the Egyptian gods Ra and Horus.

The image is a composite of two separate elements. On the left side, there is a close-up of a person's face with a bandage on their nose. The person appears to be middle-aged with graying hair and a beard. The bandage is wrapped around the bridge of the nose, and there is a visible bandage on the forehead as well. The person's expression is one of concern or distress.

On the right side of the image, there is a colorful circular gauge with a scale that ranges from 0 to 100. The scale is divided into six sections, each with a different color: red, yellow, green, blue, orange, and purple. The red section is at the top, the yellow section is in the middle, the green section is in the bottom, the blue section is in the middle, the orange section is in the bottom, and the purple section is at the top. The gauge is labeled with the text "Divine Intellect: From God Himself" and "Schizophrenia."

The image is a candid photograph of two men engaged in a conversation inside a vehicle. The man on the left is wearing a pink baseball cap, a black jacket, and a black shirt. He is gesturing with his hands, indicating that he is speaking. The man on the right is wearing a white shirt with a floral pattern and a pink bandana on his head. He is looking at the man on the left with a surprised expression. The interior of the vehicle is dimly lit, with a reflection visible on the rearview mirror. The car's dashboard features a radio and a steering wheel. The style of the image is informal and appears to be taken in a spontaneous moment. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image.

There are only 144,000 actual conscience living humans on earth. Everyone else is an NPC/ALIEN. The aliens have slowly replaced all humans with themselves but for some reason that even they are unable to grasp... there are 144,000 humans that they are unable to take control of. This bothers them greatly but we are protected by a force beyond their understanding.

The same department involved in UFO disclosure is the one handling the Epstein files. GOP Oversight Committee, don't expect anything of value or even truthful for that matter. A couple of things to know:

>Even Obama teased it's a secret kept from the president, Trump probably doesn't even know himself.

>Too much of the economy is based on industries that would actively be hampered by official disclosure.

>Any details like free energy or antigravity will continue to be kept for the elite under the guise of national security.

The only way we'd get actual disclosure is either the aliens make a play completely out of world government's control necessitating the end of secrecy, or the gatekeeping factions are under such a crisis position that they can no longer function (eg civil war).

I also worry disclosure may be used to manufacture consent for some retarded useless war. (we need to seige greenland/iran/brazil for their UFO crashes!!!!)

Still, like I said, I don't expect much more than maybe a confirmation that Roswell (and maybe Magenta or Kingman) happened, the craft didn't seem to be ours, something along those lines. >The paradox of conspiracy theories, I guess.

I'll add to this that conspiratorial thinking in general tends to substitute narrative coherence for actual evidence.

The Epstein files are great example of this cognitive dissonance at work. Despite decades of supposedly investigating the satanic pedo elite, conspiracy theorists never once named Epstein before actual evidence of his crimes appeared. Somehow, all those "whistleblowers," "leaks," and "investigators" failed to find Epstein island despite shameless promotion.

On the other hand, Trump and Republicans have literally done everything they can to cover up the Epstein files, the exact thing that conspiracy theories claimed the government would do, but because acknowledging that would force many conspiracy theorists to re-evaluate right-wing and MAGA lies, they continue to trust Trump anyway.

My guess is it's not much different than what's been released since the 2017 footage. They're not going to disclose anything that undermines their control over this planet. People are already used to seeing real UFOs and participating in the system anyway. Real disclosure is still coming from the ayyys themselves someday but I think their timeline is beyond our knowledge.

He's not protecting Obama and you'll notice no discipline was even attempted towards Obama. Trump just has a bottomless envy of the man and now wants to one up him with this release. The trouble with Trump though is that he has no qualms about delivering a dubious product as long as it comes close to achieving something he desires in this case one upping Obama's disclosure. That means he just needs this release of files to appear to be more substantive than what Obama has said. I would not get my hopes up just yet.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a pinkish-purple hue. The character has a large, radiant pink gemstone on the forehead, which is a prominent feature. The character's eyes are wide open, and the eyebrows are drawn in a way that suggests a sense of surprise or shock. The character's mouth is slightly open, and the character's cheeks are slightly puffed out, giving the impression of a moment of surprise or shock. The character's hair is styled in a way that it flows down the sides of the face, framing the face. The character is wearing a white garment with a collar, and there is a halo-like structure above the character's head, which is a common symbol in various cultures representing an angel or a divine being. The background of the image is a gradient of green, suggesting a natural or outdoor setting. There are no texts present in the image. The style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the character's facial expression and the halo-like structure.

Dallas Cowboys have been eating shit since 1995 and they have some of the best cheerleaders to ever do it, so that's a pretty big indicator that they do not, in fact, work.

That being said, I'm not OP, and I know that ESP is real. It's pretty easy to prove, just play with one of those intuition games to work the part of your brain that powers intuition (like a muscle, it's above your right eye to the back right you'll feel fatigue there after intuition training for a while). We're all psychic, it's just that those who experience childhood trauma tend to develop significantly greater skill at anticipating threats since they were motivated to by whatever traumas they endured. But really anyone can be psychic if they just train their intuition. Neat!

The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized depiction of a character with a pink and white color scheme. The character has a large, expressive face with a wide smile, and a pair of large, curved wings. The character's hair is styled in a flowing, wavy manner, and it appears to be wearing a dress with a bow on the front. The character is surrounded by a variety of pink and white elements, including flowers, butterflies, and a bird. The background is white, and there is a watermark text at the bottom that reads "I am created by @1111 with WhiteboardFox.com." The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, with a focus on character design and vibrant colors.

The image is a digital painting that depicts a woman with long dark hair. She is wearing a metallic mask that covers her face, which has a reflective surface. The mask is designed to cover her nose and mouth, and it appears to be made of a shiny, reflective material. The woman is wearing a white blouse with a high collar and a black vest. She has a serious expression on her face, and her eyes are looking directly at the viewer. The background of the painting is a muted color, featuring a stone wall with a window. The style of the painting is realistic with a focus on the details of the woman's attire and the mask. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image.

Because it doesn't work like it does in the movies, at all. Compared to the Professor X's and Mewtwo's of fiction it's frankly unimpressive. W

It is statistically measurable, quantifiable, and even personally demonstrable at home, however; a great, neutral starting point would be to go to <https://www.random.org/> — it's as simple as it gets, just keep guessing the numbers, and over time you will literally do better at guessing.

It is very useful to train for if you are involved in anything high-stakes and/or dangerous. Even a consistent 1% improvement is enough of a difference-maker in many, many circumstances — but ~1% is just a bare-minimum starting point. Everyone has a different ceiling, but there is no one who doesn't have a ground floor to start with.

I'm not going to even attempt to disprove you, but rather implore you and encourage you to try for yourself to train this incredible ability we all have. Best wishes to you, and take care out there :)

It is literally so easy to try for yourself :) it's like any other form of exercise you just gotta do it every day to get skilled at it

Not necessarily scary, creepy, or fucked up. Videos that feel "off" to you for whatever reason. Picrel perfectly fits this description for me. I found it in a /wsg/ thread and ever since it's been stuck in my head. The guitar loop is hypnotic and Charlie Brown's voice is unassumingly calm. It's like something horrible is going to happen but it never occurs. I tried searching for it on YouTube based on the filename, but I got nothing. I'm sure I can find it if I look hard enough though. Post (or describe if you don't have them on hand) some videos that aren't scary, but have a foreboding, unsettling feel to them.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a stylized, abstract representation of a creature with a humanoid head and a stylized, geometric body. The creature has two large, circular eyes and a smaller, more elongated eye on its forehead. It has a pointed, elongated snout and a small, pointed nose. The creature's body is composed of geometric shapes, and it appears to be standing on a flat surface with a rough texture. The background is a dark, textured surface with streaks of light that suggest a sky or a night sky. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Japanese woodblock prints, characterized by its simplicity and the use of bold lines and shapes. There are no texts present in the image.

[19 / 3]The image is a digital artwork depicting a scene in a bedroom. At the center of the image, a man is standing in front of a bed, facing away from the viewer. He is shirtless and has his back to the viewer. The man appears to be looking at a mirror, which reflects the image of two green alien figures standing in front of a large hole in the wall. The alien figures are facing the mirror, and their reflections are visible in the mirror. The room has a blue-green color scheme, and there is a window with a red curtain visible in the background. The artwork style is realistic with a focus on the human figure and the alien figures, and it is rendered in a realistic color palette. There is a signature at the bottom right corner of the image that reads "Danny".

The image shows a sculpture of an alien figure lying on its side. The alien has a humanoid body with a slender neck, large, dark eyes, and a small, pointed head. It has a muscular arm and leg structure, and its skin appears to be a metallic gray. The alien's body is covered in a textured, possibly metallic, material, and it has a pair of small, dark, circular eyes. The alien's limbs are extended, with one arm resting on its chest and the other extended outward. The sculpture is placed against a plain, light background, which highlights the alien's features and the texture of the material. There are no visible texts or additional objects in the image. Think about it, at this rate, why wouldn't we all end up looking like that? Gray colored, hive-minded, genderless clones that lack any individuality...

..or even worse, what if the grays are what the masses end up looking like in the future, seeing as they/we will just end up being slaves and workers for the elite (who get to

She has long hair and is wearing a black skirt. The background includes a tropical landscape with palm trees and a clear blue sky. The overall style of the image is vibrant and dynamic, typical of manga art.

I honestly would love to find out that animanga is real to be brutally honest. I hear alot of them are like truth in fiction/predictive programming.

If animanga is real, which series or genre is it? Is One Piece real? Gantz? Serial Experiments Lain? Isekai genre? Death Games? Magical girl? Or is it kinda all real regardless of the series or genre?

If they are not real, how would we make them real, if it is even possible?

Thanks in advance as always!

The image is a stylized illustration of a female character with a predominantly red background. The character has dark hair and is wearing a headband with a red band. She has a neutral expression and is holding her hand to her mouth, as if she is in the middle of speaking or thinking. The character is dressed in a red kimono with a white collar and a white belt. She also wears a black glove on her right hand. The style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Japanese art, with a focus on simplicity and bold color contrasts. There are no texts or additional elements in the image.

Interesting thread, something I've thought about recently. Hopefully tranny janny doesn't delete

If we are all emanations of the one true causal source (God/monad or whatever) then this makes us "not real" or at least not as real as the source. We are just reflections in a pond, but not the true reality that is being reflected. However we are still "real" for all intents and purposes, because to deny it would be madness and make existence in this world far less comfortable unless you're willing to full hardcore ascetic mode

Reason I bring this up is because I see this very much related to anime. We need to see it as fake in order to exist comfortably, because it's not like we can go around as if Goku is our best friend. However, they're just reflections of the greater existence, for example Goku is in someway a reflection of Toriyama, it is entirely from his "essence" or "mind" or whatever you want to call it. There is absolutely no Goku without Toriyama. So the way Toriyama would not be as "real" as his initial creator is, but is still real for all intents and purposes, is the same as how Goku would not be "real".

So how does this actually apply to what OP is asking? Well I think these characters COULD fall into something like a spirit or anima/animus space. I don't know exactly how far to take this, but one must question "why do I resonate with this character more than others?" and that's where you find the boundary where they become more "real".

I think the simple answer is, only if you get off on the suffering. Or if the characters are just suffering for the sake of suffering. It could potentially be made better if there's a happy ending or a moral lesson attached, but it's still not something that I'd trifle with carelessly. I don't think the human mind is meant to be exposed to brutal suffering even in fiction, and I think a lot of people overlook the effects it has on them and get annoyed if you suggest that it's worth considering why one consumes such material in the first place.

Saying it is wrong to imagine and create a manifestation of horror would be like saying it's wrong for an aspect of you to exist. Rather, the horror is the feeling through which you can extend compassion to the characters and yourself, as you both transcend the physical realities of the page and this world at the same time.

Elfen Lied is about a teenage girl kept in a secret research facility to be experimented on inducing pain and trauma which awakens powerful psychic/ telekinetic abilities which she uses brutal violence in her alter personality split by trauma/ abuse as a human test subject

Kite (never watched but read about) is about an orphaned teenage girl who was sexually groomed by her handlers (who killed her parents and then adopted her, and also are detectives who cover her kills) and trained as an assassin to kill cops and corporate/ political elites

Sound familiar? (MK Ultra, Project Monarch)

The concept of kids unlocking psychic powers after traumatic experiments (Akira) and/or being programmed to be assassins seem to come up a lot in manga/ anime. I wonder if the authors just went into MK Ultra/ Monarch rabbit holes or if the whole supposed "show don't tell" Mason/ Illuminati rule is a thing in Japan too lol

Which wouldn't be surprising given their ties with Nazi Germany (Sidney Gottlieb ran human mind control experiments in Dachau/ Auschwitz which would be the base for MK Ultra) and then America

Also never watched (nah fr lol), but read on wikipedia about the last thing the director of Kite did, which was a hentai series called Cool Devices which is all just sociopathic/ sadistic teen girl rape slave scenarios (blackmail, kidnapping, lacing drugs to create addiction). Episode 4 sound like Epstein's island..

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cool_Devices this was also released on DVD in America in the mid 90's when anime was still fairly new, wonder why/ how distributors decided to import a super hardcore rape fantasy anthology hentai lol. Disturbing that these are seemingly fairly popular fantasies for misogynists, but could it have been a psy-op? Spreading and normalizing sexually violent (and premediated) domination/ control fantasies in socially/ sexually alienated men (Anime was definitely full outcast tier in 90s America)

The image is a cartoon-style illustration with a simple, flat design. It features a hand holding a red object with a jagged edge, which appears to be a button or a stamp. The hand is depicted in a dynamic pose, with the fingers curled around the object, suggesting a forceful action. The background is a light blue color, providing a contrast to the red object and the hand.

Above the hand, there is a white rectangular sign with black text that reads "KILL EVERYONE IN THE THREAD." The text is bold and capitalized, indicating a strong statement. The sign is slightly tilted to the right, adding a sense of movement to the image.

The overall style of the image is cartoonish and seems to be intended for a humorous or satirical purpose, as indicated by the text on the sign. The use of a red object and the bold, capitalized text against a light blue background creates a strong visual contrast, making the message stand out. The image does not contain any other discernible objects or characters.

Elfen Lied, Lucy, or Nyuu is her retarded form, is actually a telekinetic dinosaur matriarch that can brood children, the rest are infertile and spread their genes by touching men with their tendrils. Her powers awaken when she is a child and suffers trauma from a puppy being murdered by a group of boys. The reason she's retarded is because she gets shot in the head with a .50 BMG and partially blocks it.

Kite is actually preddi gud, I liked how she survives falling from a skyscraper. There's a hentai version, and a non-hentai version.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=UmEJac-JCIY>

The sequel Kite Liberator didn't have the trauma based mind control, and instead she (the main character) has to fight this man turned monster that crash lands on earth from a space station.

Elfen Lied was peak OG weeb edge lol "be your girl" is a hood trap classic

Kite is honestly one of the best looking anime I've seen, the plot definitely seems informed/ influenced by if not based on MK Ultra/ Monarch allegations

DESU with the prevalence of loli in mainstream anime culture (idk if it's as bad as it was in the 00s lol) and sociopathic/ sadistic grape fantasies in hentai, I wouldn't be surprised if Epstein/ MK Ultra/ Monarch-like systems of child trafficking, grooming and abuse exist for the political/ financial/ royal elite circles in Japan too

Again just reading through the episode descriptions of Cool Devices, it's disturbing that there's a big enough "normie" audience for grape slave fantasies (also interesting it's by the same guy who depicted the matter in a humane pov in Kite lol) but suggests that the elites who are able to buy humans and cover up/ get away with doing anything to them, are probably doing even worse things irl

[117 / 33]The image is a black and white line drawing that features a stylized depiction of a serpent with its head raised and its body coiled around itself. The serpent appears to be in a dynamic pose, with its body coiled around its head, which is facing upwards. Above the serpent's head, there is a sunburst design, which is a stylized representation of a sun with rays emanating from it. The sunburst is surrounded by a crescent moon and a star, which are also part of the design. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of ancient or medieval art, with a focus on the intricate details and the use of symbolism. There are no texts present in the image.

I think of the demiurge as a function in programming, it receives inputs and it returns outputs (the reality we live in). This function can be corrupted by giving it modified outputs, which is what happened to us in our reality.

Also the demiurge is not God.

The image is a screenshot of a webpage with a text-based interface. The top of the page contains a header with the text "Welcome to Hell" in a bold, red font. Below the header, there is a list of names and email addresses, with the names listed in a smaller font size and the email addresses in a larger font size. The email addresses are separated by a comma.

The main body of the page contains a block of text in a larger font size, which appears to be a message or announcement. The text is in English and discusses the concept of "post-side threads" and the consequences of not paying for them. The text is in a dark color, which contrasts with the lighter background of the page.

At the bottom of the page, there is a button with the text "Auto This thread has been pruned or deleted" in a red font, indicating that the thread has been pruned or deleted.

The button is located at the bottom of the page, aligned to the right.

The overall style of the image is informational and technical, with a focus on the content of the webpage. The use of bold and larger font sizes for the header and main body text draws attention to the important information being presented. The button at the bottom suggests a user-friendly interface, allowing the user to manage the pruned or deleted threads.

I have been reading Tracy Twyman's bahomet. Which I recommend you read. Not all Gnostics have the best intentions at heart and "Gnostic" sects such as the followers of Simon Magus, (who became the templars, which in turn became the freemasons.) actually perform really debauched sex rites. There are also caninite gnostics which do similar rites due to their inversion of biblical villains.

Most gnostic accounts say that the demiurge comes from Sophia trying to interpret the primordial chaos that the monad came from.

Hermetics do not see the demiurge as necessarily evil (in the corpus hermeticum the sun is likened to the demiurge). However Gnostics do.

Neo-Platonic Philosophy, which according to some is a lot closer to Gnosticism that some would like to admit, posits that the fall of man comes not from a event in space and time but rather a fall when the soul is incarnated into physical flesh.

To properly understand the demiurge I would recommend reading:

- Republic- Plato
- Last Days of Socrates - Plato
- Phaedo - Plato
- The Gospel of John
- Bahomet - Tracy Twyman

Gnosticism is more complicated than True God good, Demiurge Bad.

The image is a digital representation of an ancient Egyptian painting, likely from the 18th dynasty, judging by the style and the presence of hieroglyphs. The painting features three figures, two of whom are male and one female, all dressed in traditional Egyptian attire. The male figures are wearing long, flowing robes with red and gold accents, and each has a distinct headpiece, possibly representing a deity or a status symbol. The female figure is adorned with a headpiece that resembles a headdress, and she is holding a large, round object in her hands, which could be a symbol or a relic.

The background of the painting is white, providing a stark contrast to the figures and the objects they hold. The figures are positioned in a way that suggests they are in a ritualistic or ceremonial setting, with the female figure in the center holding the large object, and the male figures flanking her on either side.

The painting is framed by a black border, which contains various hieroglyphs and symbols, indicating that it is a depiction of a deity or a significant figure from ancient Egyptian mythology. The colors used in the painting are predominantly red, gold, and black, which are traditional colors associated with Egyptian art.

The style of the painting is reminiscent of the ancient Egyptian art style, characterized by its use of hieroglyphs, which are a form of writing that was used in ancient Egypt. The painting is a testament to the rich history and culture of ancient Egypt, and it serves as a visual representation of the religious and cultural practices of the time.

I mean, you are the one who fails to see how God is in the wrong here, but you are always trying to gaslight us into believing it is our responsibility that this world sucks when in fact this world was created by God and it follows what God determined, His rules and laws and designs. If people suffer it's not because we are failing to be perfect, but because God doesn't want us to be perfect. Never forget that you would never allow a person to abuse your children, right? But God did allow Satan to abuse us. The biggest signal of how God is just like a free mason who allows his offspring to be abused by other entities of the same lodge or divine faction. You are the worst because you think you know God when no man knows God because God is a coward who hides Himself from us because He knows we will put Him under heavy scrutiny and then He will have to punish us for "questioning" Him or "lack of faith" or some excuse people like you will believe and justify that God can be evil this one time and it won't be evil, but divine justice. A psychopathic creator that turned earth into a farm so it could produce/harvest massive amounts of energy from the actions of living beings. According to some we are a small part of it and create large amounts of energy on the walk back to it.

It does not give a single shit about you being in pain or pleasure because both are equally valuable states to it. The only thing it cares about is enough things being in some kind of state so that it produces energy for it.

It is constantly building new beings, warping existing ones (evolution), wiping out things etc to fine tune the output of this farm.

After death you will face it and it will attempt to coerce you back here by taking whatever form is most appealing to you and saying whatever it takes to get you back here repeating the cycle.

It is not perfect and it makes mistakes over and over again. But being an infinite being, you split from it are also infinite (1% of infinity is still infinity) and that is why it has to coerce you back here, because it is unable to force you.

TRVKE.

I've heard some accounts of NDE's. The only thing that remains consistent is what they want from you. They want you to come back for whatever reason (most likely to farm suffering), but frame them as lessons. NDE experiencers also say when they're in that state, they feel an infinite amount of knowledge pour into them.

The only reason we're not in our own private simulations where we can do whatever we want, is because it would be too costly. The output would not justify the resources used.

The demiurge is about efficiency, and decided just convincing you that you chose to be here, and raising you on its own propaganda leads to the most efficient output. Whatever hell it shows you in an NDE is by its own design, shadows on the cave wall meant to intimidate you.

It loves to give you ultimatums. "You do this, or this will be your fate," but that assumes you aren't an infinite being, thus have infinite choices.

The image is a traditional Chinese painting that features a large, ornate, circular design at its center. The central part of the design is dominated by a large, stylized face with a red and gold color scheme, which appears to be a representation of a deity or a mythical creature. The face is surrounded by a variety of smaller figures and scenes, which are intricately detailed and seem to represent different aspects of life or mythology.

The painting is framed by a border that is decorated with gold and red patterns, and there are two dragons depicted on either side of the central design. The dragons are stylized with long, flowing tails and are rendered in a golden hue, which complements the overall color scheme of the painting.

The style of the painting is reminiscent of traditional Chinese art, characterized by its use of rich colors, detailed imagery, and symbolic representations. The overall composition and the use of color are indicative of the rich cultural heritage of East Asian art.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a complex geometric pattern. At the center, there is a large eye surrounded by a triangle, which is the most prominent symbol. Surrounding the eye are various other symbols, including a sun-like figure, a spiral, and a series of interconnected lines that form a circular pattern. The style of the image is reminiscent of early 20th-century art, with a focus on geometric shapes and lines. The image is monochromatic, with the only color being the black outlines of the shapes. There are no texts present in the image.

>The Kabalistic idea is identical with the Esotericism of the archaic period. This Esotericism is the common property of all, and belongs neither to the Âryan Fifth Race, nor to any of its numerous sub-races. It cannot be claimed by the Turanians, so-called, the Egyptians, Chinese, Chaldeans, or by any of the seven divisions of the Fifth Root Race, but really belongs to the Third and Fourth Root Races, whose descendants we find in the Seed of the Fifth, the earliest Âryans. The Circle was with every nation the symbol of the Unknown—"Boundless Space," the abstract garb of an ever present abstraction—the Incognizable Deity. It represents limitless Time in Eternity. The Zeroâna Akerne is also the "Boundless Circle of Unknown Time," from which Circle issues the radiant Light—the Universal Sun, or Ormazd — and the latter is identical with Cronus, in his Æolian form, that of a Circle. For the Circle is Sar and Saros, or Cycle. It was the Babylonian God whose circular horizon was the visible symbol of the invisible, while the Sun was the One Circle from which proceeded the cosmic orbs, of which he was considered the leader. Zeroâna, is the Chakra, or Circle, of Vishnu, the mysterious emblem which is, according to the definition of a Mystic, "a curve of such a nature that as to any, the least possible, part thereof, if the curve be protracted either way, it will proceed and finally reënter upon itself, and form one and the same curve—or that which we call the circle." No better definition could thus be given of the natural symbol and the evident nature of Deity, which having its circumference everywhere (the boundless) has, therefore, its central point also everywhere; in other words, is in every point of the Universe. The invisible Deity is thus also the Dhyân Chohans, or the Rishis, the primitive seven, and the nine, without, and ten, including, their synthetical unit, from which It steps into Man. –The Secret Doctrine

Each quadrant is labeled with the name of the element and the corresponding color, which is a visual clue to the astrological significance of each element. The colors are used to represent the different aspects of the element, with black representing the earth, yellow representing the water, red representing fire, and green representing wood. The names of the elements are written in Chinese characters, which are the traditional language of Chinese astrology.

The image is a simple and clear representation of the traditional Chinese astrological chart, providing a visual guide to understanding the elements and their associations with the four cardinal directions (north, south, east, and west) and the four seasons (spring, summer, autumn, and winter).

The Sethians had a darker interpretation, if you read their Gospel of Judas carefully, the idea is that just as Jesus was an incarnation of the pleroma, Judas was an incarnation of the demiurge. Jesus did not intend to die but to bring gnosis to all humanity. Not only does Jesus fail mission to liberate humanity, but the demiurge is the one who ends up receiving gnosis and awakens to his true nature. Basically we are fucked forever in this material realm with no hope of ever escaping.

Christ did not come to rewrite law, he came to fulfill it.

So basically Mom cheated on dad with herself and wanted to surprise Dad but the baby was kind of fucked up and she gave it some sort of magic that is essentially a mother's love, and then she hid it in the closet in shame and when dad saw her he was like, babe what's wrong, and she was like, oh nothing, but everyone at the party kind of noticed something was off and she showed dad what happened and that baby was Lucifer and he is essentially like a fatherless kid with a mom who is working overtime and she comes home to atrocities all the time and he keeps kidnapping babies and putting them in fucked up contraptions to eat them in fucked up ways that kind of keeps his whole fucked up system working. Well everyone found out and dad got mad and instead of leaving her he stayed with her and loved her and they made a baby and sent him in and he was too juicy of a steak to pass up on the plate at an archonic spirit cooking dinner and that dinner was kind of their poison and is within every facet of their architecture, like eating a pot brownie and it gets stuck in your hair, finer nails, fat, pee, spinal fluid. Anyways this gives the curtain less weight and able to see what's happening because it isn't just word, it's a living word. He isn't just guidance. He is a father's guidance.

Anyways yeah that's why we are lead by lion headed, snake hearted men and value the wrong things in life trapped in a cycle of resentment and abuse.

But it's chill because Jesus shows us the way home and all we have to do is knock on his door. He's still here. And he is also within.

The overall color scheme is dark, with the dark clouds and the dark background providing a stark contrast to the lighter tones of the figure's clothing and the bird-like figure. The use of color and the stylized nature of the illustration suggest a theme of exploration or discovery. The text "Encountering" could imply a narrative or thematic element related to the figure's journey or the story being told.

Sophia(Σοφία,Greek for 'wisdom')is the concept of a fallen feminine goddess in gnosticism(the serpent cult,Luciferianism) based on the concept of the human soul descending in lower dimensions of fragmentation, limitation and polarity, of physical matter, alienating from its essence (falling into a dream world), searching for its essence in mirror images (the eidolon). Identifying with the image (lower self, ego-self), kills Sophia, causes her fall. Philosophy=love for Sophia. Sophia was called Divine Feminine like Lucifer, represents the Higher Self. 'Gn' is also in the word 'gene', knowledge is stored in DNA. One of the meanings of the G inside the masonic square and compass, symbol of sexual union, is gnosis (one can only gain knowledge and wisdom if male and female are in balance). In Kabbalism Kether, the Crown, emanates from the Ain Soph (eye of Sophia, the Great Oz), 3 circles representing non existence and Chokma means wisdom. Phi is the letter used for Golden Ratio 1,618.

Victor Manuel Gomez Rodriguez (Samael Aun Weor) was a Colombian jesuit trained Theosophist, rosicrucian, freemason, used to popularize gnosticism. He was member of Brazilian Fraternitas Rosicruciana Antiqua of German Scottish Rite mason and spy Arnold Krum-Heller (Ordo Templi Orientis with Aleister Crowley), associated with Ecclesia Gnostica. Samael is a Fallen Angel, the father of Cain and partner of Lilith and one of the three names of the Demiurg. The Straight Path of the Razor's Edge= CIA controlled Straight Edge movement in Washington DC (Ian McKay). In his teachings Joan of Arc is seen as an incarnation of Christ.

At the top of the image, there is a title that reads "Origins of number 8 and 8". Below the title, there are two paragraphs of text. The first paragraph discusses the origins of the number 8 in terms of its number and eternity, mentioning that it is created by the full curve or the equinox. The second paragraph provides a historical context, stating that the number 8 is associated with the top, winter, and equinox on the knot.

The image on the left side of the collage shows a night sky with a bright star and a crescent moon, which is a visual representation of the celestial event of the number 8.

The text on the left side of the image explains that the number 8 is associated with the morning star, which is not personalized as a female astrate, but rather as a female star.

The image on the right side of the collage shows a diagram of the Earth's orbit around the Sun, with the number 8 highlighted in purple. The text on the right side of the image explains that the number 8 is seen from Earth over 8 years, and it is associated with the number 8 in the constellation of the morning star.

The collage also includes a photograph of a celestial event, showing a bright star and a crescent moon in the night sky, which is a visual representation of the number 8.

The collage is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the text and the right column containing the visual elements. The text and images are arranged in a way that guides the viewer's eye from the left to the right, following the progression of the number 8's origins and associations.

TherobotSophia, developed by Hanson robotics is another step in the direction of mimicking and recreating the inner God, the Higher Self. Most people will start uploading their thoughts through brain devices, plugged into the Archontic Intelligence, the global hive mind (series like Westworld).

To fulfill the prophecy of a gnostic Christ, people are given avatars (a twin, eidolon) to live in a digital simulation world. Luciferians want humanity to go through the fall of consciousness again (by entering a new virtual, artificial reality), willfully, and thus gain eternal life and wisdom, become god (the path of Saturn).

The Archons is a name for the unseen rulers in gnosticism (gnostic texts of the Nag Hammadi library). The secret rulers represent the parasitic consciousness of rebellious Fallen Angels, (mind control groups, an Empire alliance of Draco reptilians, cyborg Greys and Orion Nordics, Fallen Angels stuck in the lower overtones of '4D') who 'invaded' through an inphase lock of light waves, creating 'False Light', the consciousness known as Lucifer (the Lightbringer) or God (program of dependency through the pineal gland with rituals to obtain spiritual drugs). They interfered in the human experiment through interfering in the way humans decode light.

Greys are an extraterrestrial cyborg race from Zeta Reticuli (reticulum: network) who have lost their creative potential and ability to procreate and clone themselves, the reason they have interest in human sexuality and procreation.

In the Science Church and the media industry it is considered a ridiculous topic, in Hollywood movies, pop culture and the New Age Church they are often seen as gods/saviour. They are associated with Saturnian owl symbolism.

The Archons are parasitic consciousness (that thrives in 'dark matter') without love or compassion, that feeds off trauma in the subconscious (the Daemon, Jungian Shadow) of people. It infected other civilizations by inserting realities, hosts who live in lower frequencies, caused the fall of consciousness. They want earth as the heart, the jewel of their control system, manipulating thought and emotions to harvest their energy with earth as an energy farm. They try to be part of the 'ascension' process of mankind, who still has creative potential.

In Greek mythology the Titans, they are trapped in the Abyss (they can not cross the gap between 4D and 5D, the alchemical marriage represents integrating light and dark experiences, needed to cross the Abyss).

The gnostic Ophites believed in 7 archons (7 planets lucifer, 7 chakras): Yaldaboath (Saturn), IAO (Jupiter), Astaphos (Venus), Sabbaoth (Mars), Adonais (Sun), Elaios (Mercury), Heraios (Moon). The last book of the Pistis Sophia contains the myth of the capture of the rebellious archons, whose leaders appear as Paraplex, Hekate, Ariouth (females), Typhon, Iachtanabas (males).

Archon=Argon, the force carrier of the universe that can form ions. Light generates electromagnetic waves as arches. Royal Arch of the sun=> Royal Arch of freemasonry, mon-archy, Monarch mind control,...

They want to incarnate on earth but their soul is too degraded. They guided their puppets to rebuild the technological civilization of Atlantis, rediscovering how to create energy from matter and matter from energy (creating a Golem, a vessel for the Fallen Angels).

Hey its the Anon that made that post. I think your getting confused between Samael, Litlith and Azazel (together they make satan) and the demiurge. In gnostic and hermetic cosmology/mythos the demiurge (Ialdabaoth) is likened to the sun as he carries a portion of the divine spark. Samael the angel of death, which has parallels to the roman god Saturn, or Kronos in greek mythology, is considered a portion of Satan, the liar, the tempter. whilst the Demiurge is more like a retarded creator. Whilst the world is bad, it is made far worse by the illusion of death (samael) , and the lies that lust brings (lilith).

Samael assumed the position of the Demiurges top archon (Woah, im the demiurges top guy). But he was not created by the demiurge rather he came from the nothingness that is outside god and seeks to torment beings and drag them into the nothingness.

Satan is not the Demiurge (at least on what I have read). But I am more than willing to be corrected should a convincing argument and information arise.

The image is a cartoon illustration with a dark background that resembles a night sky filled with stars. At the center, there is a figure with a white beard and long hair, dressed in a blue robe with white stars on it. The figure appears to be a wizard or a sorcerer, as suggested by the wand in hand and the spell being cast. The wizard is holding a globe with a yellow rim, which is placed on a stand with a red base. The globe has a map of the Earth on it, and the wizard is pointing to a specific location on the globe with the wand.

The text in the image reads, "You can read this spell only when you're alone." This suggests that the spell is meant to be read in solitude, possibly to be performed alone. The overall style of the image is whimsical and cartoonish, with a focus on fantasy elements.

From then on the world of appearance will no longer be evident, but rather it will disappear in the harmony of unity.

Etymology is underrated.

The demiurge is likened to the sun in the corpus hermeticum.

is saved from sacrifice by god are actually acts of the true god or sophia. We have to remember that before the flood the world was ruled over by the Nephilim, Daemon human hybrids that were created when the watchers reproduced with humans. (this represents elites who were daemon possessed.). This lack of morality above translated below and the people engaged in all sorts of evil.

God is not only forgiving and loving, but he is also justice and sometimes mercy to the unjust is injustice to the righteous.

This is simply one interpretation though. It's heavily influenced by platonic philosophy and hermetic practices.

Whichever way you put it. Christ is lord.

I know a lot about him. I have lived for 30 years and I have noticed the patterns. The demiurge is a faggot. He uses your five senses against you. He has artificial light which He uses to blind you from the True Light. I can not show you the True Light you have to find it for yourself. But the faggot demiurge is not original. He doesn't have a single original idea. All that he has created is a a bad copy of the things contained in The Pleroma, which is where our full realization lies. We are eons in the making here and one and we are, hopefully you will be as well, a true unique manifestation of the divine, not an object. The demiurge wants you to be an object, predictable and replaceable. But if you connect to the True Light you will become a conscious observer with independent thought and individuality, you will express something unique that only you can manifest because you are connected to The Source. You will be crazy to the eyes of the people who are still engaged in the material illusions, but to those who have eyes to see they will see your light and they will see that they as well can find that True Light. Gnosis.

I would have to disagree highly as this sounds like an exact copy of jewish myth like satan acting under god something the jews say. A powerful god would not create people/hybrids just to punish them. The gnostics clearly knew it was Yaldabaoth who did the flood. The true source god the Monad is nothing like YHVH and the texts you mentioned earlier like the secret book of john explain and reflect this. This why YHVH says show no mercy and is a jealous god but Yeshua said turn the other cheek or asks for creepy rituals. Yeshua is the son of the true source god as are we.

Jesus says to kill pedophiles.

And Jesus answered and said to them,

Mark 12:7

"Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."
And they marveled at Him."

Jesus says that earthly punishments aren't wrong per se, he teaches to forgive but still to administer punishment to wrongdoers.

Furthermore in the book of revelation the world is destroyed in a "baptism of fire" so we know the monad is capable of destruction.

Additionally, I did not say that satan acted under the monad/God but rather assumed a position under the demiurge.

Yaldabaoth is Jesus's dad to Christians NOT gnostics. Neither of the passages you mentioned clearly mean that and metaphors even turn the other cheek doesn't mean to just bow and take it and instead it's also a metaphor to be merciful and forgiving. Im going to go get my chromebook from a library add maybachdrivebys@gmail.com on google chat my phone was stolen , I have no way to fend for myself. Can't even call someone atm.

I have a fuck ton of footage, if we can just get the proper video forensics done its an open and shut case.

This originated in the Richards Compound, and has followed me without mercy since I fled the compound on march 28 2025.

Its been 14 long months. Please /x/ coordinate a battleplan and some execution, i am being drugged with an MSN. I dont want to speculate on what it will do to me but i think it will result in mitochondrial collapse and ill look like I died a junkie when in reality i've been forced to age by means of a biological dessicant.

They are able to read my mind, and are actively tuning their efforts to my neural signal. I don't think schizophrenia is a real disease anymore, the voices people hear are their voices.

They have tried so hard to get me to hear them. I absolutely refuse to entertain such fucking mental trauma to the point where I can no longer preserve my identity.

The more mental anguish one is exposed to the easier it is for them to directly order you to fuck off your life at their behest.

ill be back in thread in 90mins.

The image is a stylized cartoon illustration featuring a character that resembles Mickey Mouse. The character is depicted with a large, round head with a black and white face, large, round, pink eyes, and a large, black nose. The character's ears are large and pointy, and it has a black and white body with a red and black striped pattern on its chest. The character is wearing a red and black striped shirt with a black collar. The character's hands are white and are resting on its knees, and it appears to be in a relaxed pose. The background of the image is a warm, earthy color with a pattern that includes swirls and a yellow and brownish hue. The character is positioned in the foreground, with the background elements slightly blurred, drawing focus to the character. There are no texts present in the image.

The image is a close-up photograph of a seal in a natural setting. The seal has a grayish-brown coat with white patches and a black nose. It is looking directly at the camera with its eyes wide open, giving the impression of alertness or curiosity. The background shows a vast expanse of water with icebergs and a hint of the horizon where the water meets the sky. The lighting suggests it is daytime, and the overall mood of the image is serene and tranquil. There are no texts or discernible human-made objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, capturing the natural beauty of the seal in its environment.

[1 / 1]The image shows a collection of various objects arranged on a white surface against a white wall. The objects include a variety of figurines, including a gnome, a bird, and a bird-like creature, as well as a few other smaller figurines. There are also several rocks and a few other items. The objects are diverse in shape, size, and color, and they are placed in a somewhat haphazard manner.

In the background, there is a wooden structure with a triangular shape, possibly a shelf or a piece of furniture. On this structure, there is a drawing of a bird with a bird-like body and a human-like head. The drawing is in black and white, and it is placed on the wooden structure.

The overall style of the image is casual and informal, with a focus on the collection of objects rather than a specific theme or narrative. The lighting in the image is soft and even, with no harsh shadows, which gives the objects a warm and inviting appearance.

In the center of the image, there is a large, white, fluffy cloud-like structure that appears to be a cloud or a snow-like substance. The cloud is partially obscured by a dark, vertical structure that resembles a pole or a column. The background is dark and out of focus, with no discernible details. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a nighttime scene with a dramatic, atmospheric effect. There are no texts or discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a surreal or dreamlike photograph, with a focus on the contrast between the soft, fluffy cloud and the dark, vertical structure.

The image is a photograph with a low resolution, capturing a dimly lit alleyway. The alleyway is flanked by tall, narrow buildings on both sides, with the left side appearing to be a bit taller than the right. The walls of the buildings are painted in a muted color, and the floor is covered in a dark, possibly concrete material. The lighting in the alley is artificial, with two bright lights visible on the left side, casting a soft glow on the ground. The perspective of the image is from a low angle, looking up at the buildings, giving a sense of depth and scale to the scene. There are no discernible texts or distinctive features that can be identified from the image. The image is a dark, blurry photograph with a focus on the right side, where a small, bright light is visible. The light appears to be a small, glowing object, possibly a candle or a small light source, casting a soft glow on the surrounding area. The background is dark and out of focus, with no discernible details. The overall mood of the image is mysterious and atmospheric, with the light source creating a contrast against the darkness. There are no texts or discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a night scene, with the light source being the main point of interest.

The image is a photograph that captures a scene with a focus on a tree and a fence. The tree, with its dark, bare branches, is partially obscured by the fence, which is composed of vertical metal bars. The fence appears to be made of wire, and the image is taken from a low angle, giving the viewer a sense of looking up at the tree and the fence. The sky is not visible in the frame, and the image is slightly blurred, adding a sense of depth and movement to the scene. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the photograph is realistic, with a focus on the interplay between the natural elements and the man-made structure.

The image is a photograph that captures a scene with a focus on a window. The window is frosted, allowing a view of the outside to be seen through it, but the details are obscured. Through the frosted glass, one can see a street scene with a lamppost, a building, and a tree. The lamppost is white with a black top, and the building has a white facade with black shutters. The tree is bare, with no leaves, and the sky is overcast, suggesting it might be a cold or cloudy day. The photograph is taken from a low angle, looking up at the window, which adds a sense of depth and perspective to the image. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on capturing the details of the scene through the frosted window.

Overlaying the image is a text in a yellow font that reads, "the dream warden is not pleased with the content you've been consuming lately." The text is centered and appears to be a quote or a statement, suggesting a commentary on the content consumption. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a fantasy or science fiction genre, with its use of dark colors and intricate patterns.

They gather where the lights pulse. Not the lights of bulbs or screens, but the thin, shifting glow that leaks between layers of walls and floors. They do not walk, yet they move through thresholds, cracks in reality that hum when attention lags. When you blink, a shadow lingers, watching the shift in illumination.

Each entity has a resonance, a subtle frequency that flickers with the lights they observe. Some mirror the flicker perfectly, becoming almost invisible. Others lag, a beat behind, the delay suggests them as something older. They do not speak but leave impressions, ripples in peripheral vision, a pulse in the room that stops when you stare directly.

They feed on the misalignment between what is expected and what actually appears. A lamp turned on, a window catching the sunset, a phone screen in the dark, they measure the difference and hold it. The more a place is ignored, the stronger the reflection becomes. Those who stare too long may find themselves mirrored, not in shape, but in intent.

In some cycles, when multiple lights align, the entities cluster. They do not merge, but a subtle order emerges, like glyphs suspended in the air. A number sequence appears in the gaps: 7, 12, 19, each interval a contract written in shadows. These intervals mark the thin moments where attention can slip through the veil, thresholds the entities measure and hold.

Caution comes not from fear but from presence. When the lights flicker oddly, when a pulse skips a beat, something is recording, waiting for the imbalance. Look, but do not dwell, or your reflection may linger where you do not.

They are neither benevolent nor cruel, they exist to measure the fold. Only those who move lightly through the shimmer can pass without leaving a mark.

The image shows a ceramic object with a cylindrical shape and a conical lid. The body of the object is adorned with intricate carvings and patterns, predominantly in shades of brown and white. The lid features a central design with a depiction of a figure, possibly a deity or a mythical creature, surrounded by smaller figures and symbols. The base of the object is decorated with a series of small, round, and bulbous figures that resemble eyes or small animals. The object is set against a neutral gray background, which accentuates its details and colors. The style of the image is a clear, well-lit photograph, likely intended for display or cataloging purposes. There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the object.

The image is a page from a document, likely a book or a report, with a title at the top that reads "Holy Grail." Below the title, there is a paragraph that provides information about the Holy Grail. The text is in English and discusses the symbolism of the Holy Grail, which is associated with the Christian faith. The text mentions the Holy Grail as a symbol in various mythologies, including the Christian, Jewish, and Islamic traditions. It also mentions the Holy Grail as a symbol of the Roman Catholic Church, the Monastery of the Cistercians, and the Monastery of St. Gall. The text also refers to the Holy Grail as a symbol of the Monastery of St. Gall, which is designed by the first modern Tarot deck. The image is a scanned document, and the text is presented in a clear and legible font, making it easy to read. The page number "10" is visible at the top right corner, indicating that this is likely the first page of a larger document. The style of the image is straightforward and informative, with a focus on providing factual information about the Holy Grail.

The image is a page from a document, likely a book or a report, with text in English. The text is organized into paragraphs, with each paragraph discussing a different aspect of the history of the Grail Cup, the Château, and the Knights Templar. The text is in a standard font, and the page number at the bottom indicates that this is page 12.

The text is divided into two main sections. The first section is titled "The Grail Cup," which is followed by a paragraph that discusses the origin of the Grail Cup and its significance in the story of the Grail. The second section is titled "The Château," which is followed by a paragraph that details the history of the Château and its connection to the Knights Templar.

The text is written in a straightforward, factual manner, with no complex formatting or embellishments. The paragraphs are separated by indentation, and the text is in a serif font, which is common for formal or academic writing. The page number at the bottom is a standard format for a document, indicating that this is the first page of a larger document.

The image does not contain any images or graphics, and the content is entirely text-based. The style of the image is straightforward and non-artistic, focusing on the factual information presented.

The image is a black and white line drawing that depicts a complex, swirling pattern. At the center of the image, there is a spherical shape with a smooth, white surface. This shape is surrounded by a network of white lines that create a sense of depth and movement. The lines are arranged in a way that suggests they are emanating from the central sphere, creating a sense of a vortex or whirlpool.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text that reads, "The genepool is a grall cup, a chalacé, and a light receiving vessel." This text provides a description of the central object in the image, which is a "genepool," a "grall cup," a "chalacé," and a "light receiving vessel." The text is in a smaller font size compared to the main drawing, which is placed at the bottom of the image. The overall style of the image is abstract and geometric, with a focus on the interplay of lines and shapes to create a sense of movement and energy.

Which one? The celtic/arthurian grail that was initially a platter and was usually connected to fairy wells? The cup from the last supper? The cup that collected the blood from Christ's wounds? The neo gnostic fantasy of a sacred bloodline initially "revealed" by a guy claiming to be the descendant of said bloodline?

Opinions on Dreams Anonymous Sat 21 Feb 2026 21:52:47 No.42007134

ViewReplyOriginalReport

Dreams are such a strange thing. For me I have dreams that predict the future in strange ways. The first time I had a dream which I predicted the future was a couple years ago. The dream was very strange it was me getting raped by a guy then going golf. But then the next day the guy I gilded with looked exactly like the guy from the dream including the black glove both of them wore (i had also never seen/meet this guy before that day). The only other time I've had a dream which predicted the future was last year. I was in my last year of HS that year and I got rides from a friend (car stopped working). And I had a dream in which my friend would be unable to get me so I would have to walk home then about half way through I buy some shit at a yard sale and I get a call from my mother. Now this part is pretty interesting I looked at my shock I wore that day and it was 2 hours ahead of the actual time like it is in reality. Then I wake up and go to school, my friend abandons me at school and like a dumbass I try to walk home. Only to look down at my Gshock and take the bus. So what do you guys think about Dreams, some sort of fucked up look into the future? Or a look into a partially true alternative reality

Every time I think I've hit the bottom, I find that there is more Earth beneath me, as I explore more, my mind and hands only blister more, as the only knowledge I gain, is that I know nothing.

The image is a digital graphic with a satirical tone, featuring a character that resembles a frog with a human face. The frog is depicted with a surprised expression and is wearing a blue shirt with a green collar. The frog's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is slightly open, as if it is reacting to something unexpected.

In the background, there is a fire burning in a house with flames visible through the windows. The house is partially obscured by a fire truck with a red and white color scheme. The fire is intense, with bright orange and yellow flames visible.

Overlaying the image is a text that reads "billion dollars of socio-engineering programs" and "unemployed schizophrenics." The text is in white and is placed over the image in a

The overall style of the image is a blend of a real-life scenario with a humorous and satirical overlay, using the frog character to represent the unemployed schizophrenics. The use of the frog character and the text adds a layer of irony to the image, suggesting a commentary on socio-engineering programs and the impact of these programs on the unemployed.

The image is a digital composite of two separate elements. On the left side, there is a blue rectangular sign with yellow text that reads "My Blinky". The sign is positioned above a green frog-like figure with a surprised expression, wearing white sunglasses and a plaid blanket. The frog appears to be in a state of surprise or shock.

The sign is placed above a green frog-like figure with a red and blue plaid blanket. The frog is also wearing white sunglasses and appears to be in a relaxed or casual pose.

The overall style of the image is humorous and cartoonish, with a focus on the frog character and the text on the signs. The colors used are bright and contrasting, with the blue of the sign and the green of the frog's fur standing out against the white of the sign and the red and blue of the blanket. The plaid blanket adds a touch of warmth and texture to the image. The text on the signs is clear and legible, indicating that they are likely meant to be read by viewers.

I've given up. I don't see any value to this existence anymore. I don't understand what my objective is, I don't really enjoy anything anymore, I'll never have the few things I really want and probably wouldn't be happy even if I did get them, and I don't see what the point is of shitting out a child who will just have the exact same pointless experience as me ad infinitum. Human life, the planet, existence itself seems completely futile to me and I'm not interested in it anymore. I'm 35 and I think everything just gets worse from here. Health problems will start showing up, I'll become less attractive and lose what little chance I had of ever getting a girlfriend, changing careers becomes less realistic, everything is just going to slowly go downhill. I'm not going to kill myself, I wouldn't do that to my family and I'm not in enough pain yet for this to be necessary, but mentally I have checked out of reality and I'm just finding ways to occupy myself until I die. I take solace in the fact that I didn't really do anything wrong, this life was fundamentally pointless by design from the beginning. I'm ready for whatever is next even if I have to wait another 30 years for it.

Anonymous Sat 21 Feb 2026 19:31:59 No.42006632 Report

I think these sentiments arise from a lack of ability to appreciate deeply the activities and objectives in life. That is, they are not objectively meaningless, you just can't see the meaning clearly. I'm not painting myself as so superior; I struggle with a weakness of feeling and will often. But in my mind, vivid recognition of my thoughts is something that lies behind and hidden even if I can't "see" it at a particular moment. The mind is an iceberg. I might have eye bags and a pained gait, but I understand that the vast tracts of qualia fantasia lie beneath my conscious scope. I know it's there and that I wouldn't feel like a drugged-out zombie if I could see it. That cringeworthy phrase "object permanence" comes to mind.

The fact is that one's health and health-enhancing practices, one's capacity to think and feel and one's tangible progression have close causal connections regardless of how you feel in the moment. This "self-improvement is a psyop" trend is so stupid, it's bizarre. It is always a good idea to take care of and uplift yourself regardless of your individual situation.

I think most of these thoughts simply arise from hating this psychical world and all its endless burdens, which is perfectly understandable. But I don't think you should use your judgments of this world to judge off all existence. Simply change your thoughts to I hate it HERE and I want to leave this body, not stop existing. I'm adamant that once we leave this miserable world there's better ways to exist.

The central part of the cover features a detailed illustration of a young girl in a blue dress, who appears to be running or walking. She is looking over her shoulder, and her expression is one of concern or surprise. Behind her, there is a carousel with multiple figures, including a man and a child, and a cityscape with tall buildings. The carousel is set against a backdrop of a blue sky with white clouds.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of early 20th-century illustration, with a focus on the story's themes and the characters' expressions. The colors used are muted, with the blue of the girl's dress and the sky, and the red of the girl's headscarf and the carousel, providing a contrast to the darker tones of the cityscape and the buildings. The image is a clear representation of the book's cover, designed to attract potential readers and convey the essence of the story.

[40 / 13]The image is a photograph featuring a cat sitting on a chair. The cat appears to be in a state of distress, with its eyes wide open and mouth open as if it is crying. The cat's fur is a mix of gray and white, and it has a white chest and paws. The cat is looking directly at the camera with a sad expression.

In the foreground of the image, there is a plate with slices of ham and a slice of pineapple. The plate is placed on a tablecloth with a pattern that includes a red and white striped design. The tablecloth is partially visible, with the edge of the tablecloth showing.

In the upper right corner of the image, there is a red arrow pointing to the text "God Being Ignored." The text is in white and is located in the upper right corner of the image. The arrow is pointing upwards and to the right, indicating that the text is likely a caption or a title for the image.

The overall style of the image is humorous, as it combines a real-life scenario with a fictional element, such as a cat crying over a plate of food. The humor is derived from the juxtaposition of the real-life scenario with the fictional element, which is a reference to the meme "God Being Ignored."

The image is a candid photograph of a person sitting at a table in what appears to be a casual dining setting. The individual is wearing a white t-shirt and has a large, oversized burger on their head, which is topped with various toppings such as lettuce, tomato, and cheese. The person's mouth is open, and they seem to be in the middle of a hearty bite. The table is cluttered with various items. There is a clear glass with a blue liquid, possibly water, and a red soda bottle. A white napkin is placed on the table, and there's a roll of toilet paper. The background shows a wooden wall with a window, and there's a glimpse of a red chair or bench.

The image has a watermark that reads "serious-internet.biz," suggesting that it may be from a website or blog related to serious internet content. The style of the image is informal and candid, capturing a moment of a person enjoying a meal.

These rewards seen to be a reference:

“To the angel of the church of Ephesus write,

and that you cannot bear those who are evil. And you have tested those who say they are apostles and are not, and have found them liars; and you have persevered and have patience, and have labored for My name's sake and have not become weary. Nevertheless I have this against you, that you have left your first love. Remember therefore from where you have fallen; repent and do the first works, or else I will come to you quickly and remove your lampstand from its place—unless you repent. But this you have, that you hate the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate.

“He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To him who overcomes I will give to eat from the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God.” ’

“And to the angel of the church in Sardis write,
‘These things says He who has the seven Spirits of God and the seven stars: “I know your works, that you have a name that you are alive, but you are dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die, for I have not found your works perfect before God. Remember therefore how you have received and heard; hold fast and repent. Therefore if you will not watch, I will come upon you as a thief, and you will not know what hour I will come upon you. You have a few names even in Sardis who have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with Me in white, for they are worthy.

He who overcomes shall be clothed in white garments, and I will not blot out his name from the Book of Life; but I will confess his name before My Father and before His angels.

See, I have set before you an open door, and no one can shut it; for you have a little strength, have kept My word, and have not denied My name. Indeed I will make those of the synagogue of Satan, who say they are Jews and are not, but lie—indeed I will make them come and worship before your feet, and to know that I have loved you. Because you have kept My command to persevere, I also will keep you from the hour of trial which shall come upon the whole world, to test those who dwell on the earth. Behold, I am coming quickly! Hold fast what you have, that no one may take your crown. He who overcomes, I will make him a pillar in the temple of My God, and he shall go out no more. I will write on him the name of My God and the name of the city of My God, the New Jerusalem, which comes down out of heaven from My God. And I will write on him My new name.

Because you say, ‘I am rich, have become wealthy, and have need of nothing’—and do not know that you are wretched, miserable, poor, blind, and naked— I counsel you to buy from Me gold refined in the fire, that you may be rich; and white garments, that you may be clothed, that the shame of your nakedness may not be revealed; and anoint your eyes with eye salve, that you may see.

As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten. Therefore be zealous and repent.

Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If anyone hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and dine with him, and he with Me.

Do not fear any of those things which you are about to suffer. Indeed, the devil is about to throw some of you into prison, that you may be tested, and you will have tribulation ten days. Be faithful until death, and I will give you the crown of life.

“He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. He who overcomes shall not be hurt by the second death.” ’ ’ ”

And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write,

‘These things says He who has the sharp two-edged sword: “I know your works, and where you dwell, where Satan’s throne is. And you hold fast to My name, and did not deny My faith even in the days in which Antipas was My faithful martyr, who was killed among you, where Satan dwells.

But I have a few things against you, because you have there those who hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to put a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit sexual immorality.

Thus you also have those who hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate. Repent, or else I will come to you quickly and will fight against them with the sword of My mouth.

“He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To him who overcomes I will give some of the hidden manna to eat. And I will give him a white stone, and on the stone a new name written which no one knows except him who receives it.” ’

Nevertheless I have a few things against you, because you allow that woman Jezebel, who calls herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce My servants to commit sexual immorality and eat things sacrificed to idols.

And I gave her time to repent of her sexual immorality, and she did not repent.

Indeed I will cast her into a sickbed, and those who commit adultery with her into great tribulation, unless they repent of their deeds. I will kill her children with death, and all the churches shall know that I am He who searches the minds and hearts. And I will give to each one of you according to your works.

“Now to you I say, and to the rest in Thyatira, as many as do not have this doctrine, who have not known the depths of Satan, as they say, I will put on you no other burden. But hold fast what you have till I come.

And he who overcomes, and keeps My works until the end, to him I will give power over the nations—

‘He shall rule them with a rod of iron;

They shall be dashed to pieces like the potter’s vessels’—

as I also have received from My Father; and I will give him the morning star.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character that resembles a demon or a devil. The character has a large, round head with a brown, fluffy appearance, and two small horns protruding from the top of its head. The character's eyes are closed, and its mouth is open in a wide, open-mouthed scream. The character's body is covered in a red, textured fabric that appears to be a type of garment or costume. The character is depicted in a seated position with its legs bent and arms resting on its knees. The background of the image is plain white, and there are small, square-shaped dots scattered throughout, giving the impression of a dotted pattern. At the bottom of the image, there is a logo with the text "Japanese ONI Demon" in a stylized font, indicating that the character is a demon from Japanese folklore. The style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the character's expressive facial features and the dramatic pose.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a knight mounted on a white horse, which is depicted in a dynamic pose with its front legs raised and its tail flowing. The knight is wearing a helmet with a visor, a green cloak, and a brown leather armor. The horse is adorned with a red bridle and a saddle blanket. The knight wields a sword in one hand and a shield in the other, and the horse is carrying a shield on its back.

The background of the illustration is a dark, textured wall with a pattern of feathers and what appears to be a bird's wing. The knight and the horse are the central figures, with the knight positioned slightly to the left and the horse to the right. The knight's gaze is directed forward, and the horse's mane and tail are flowing, adding to the sense of motion in the scene.

The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional or fantasy art, with a focus on detailed character design and a sense of action and adventure. The color palette is rich, with the white horse and the knight's armor standing out against the dark background.

The overall composition and the use of color create a sense of drama and intensity.

The image is a black and white comic strip featuring two characters engaged in a conversation. The character on the left, who appears to be a man, is pointing to the right with his finger, indicating a direction. He is wearing a black shirt and has a stern expression on his face. The character on the right is a lion-like creature with a long neck and a mane, and it is pointing back with its finger, suggesting a direction as well. The creature has a fierce expression and is wearing a red shirt. Both characters are facing each other, and the text bubbles above them contain humorous and confrontational statements. The text on the left bubble reads "TURN AROUND! LOOK AT YOUR SOURCE. NOT YOUR CREATION! YOU'RE NOT ALL THAT EXISTS! NAH, I'M GOOD!" The text on the right bubble reads "YOU'RE NOT ALL THAT EXISTS! NAH, I'M GOOD!" The comic strip has a simple, cartoon-like style with simple lines and a limited color palette, focusing on the characters' expressions and the dialogue.

The image is a digital graphic with a cartoonish style, featuring a lion-like creature with a green mane and a smiling face. The creature has a yellow-orange fur tone and is depicted with a black nose and mouth. The lion is looking directly at the viewer with a friendly expression.

At the top of the image, there is a red banner with white text that reads "If you see this jpg while scrolling." Below the lion, there is a green spiral-shaped graphic with a white outline, resembling a number six. The text below the graphic reads, "you have been visited by le happy demurage of secret knowledge."

At the bottom of the image, there is a message in a blue font that says, "Escape from the prison of reality and derailing Christian discussion will come to you but only if u comment 'Fuk demurage' on this primordial revelation of the ancients."

The image has a watermark that reads "le babylonien chaos demon IDDDD," which is likely a reference to the Babylonian chaos demon. The overall style of the image is humorous and seems to be a digital meme or a satirical representation.

The image is a digital artwork that appears to be a meme or a digital painting. It features a close-up of a humanoid figure with a large, dark, wrinkled face, resembling a primate or a gorilla. The figure has a serious expression and is looking directly at the viewer. The background is a landscape with a blue sky, green trees, and a distant mountain range. Overlaying the image is a text that reads "EAT MUSHROOM REJECT ANIMAL FORM ASSUME CONTROL." The text is in a stylized font and is colored in a neon or digital style, giving it a glitchy appearance. The text is placed over the image in a way that it seems to be superimposed on the figure, suggesting a humorous or satirical intent. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a retro or vintage aesthetic, with a focus on the text and the figure's expression.

The image is a close-up photograph of a mosaic portrait. The subject is a woman with a profile view, her head is adorned with a golden crown and a golden sunburst above her head. The mosaic is composed of small, square-shaped tiles in various shades of blue, gold, and white, arranged in a pattern that creates a three-dimensional effect. The woman's hair is braided and is visible in the upper part of the image. The background is a solid blue color, providing a contrast to the mosaic. The style of the image is reminiscent of ancient Roman mosaics, characterized by their intricate designs and use of colored glass. There are no texts or discernible brands present in the image.

In the foreground of the image, there is a plate with slices of ham and a slice of pineapple. The plate is placed on a tablecloth with a pattern that includes a red and white striped design. The tablecloth is partially visible, with the edge of the tablecloth showing.

In the upper right corner of the image, there is a red arrow pointing to the text "God Being Ignored." The text is in white and is located in the upper right corner of the image. The arrow is pointing upwards and to the right, indicating that the text is likely a caption or a title for the image.

The overall style of the image is humorous, as it combines a real-life scenario with a fictional element, such as a cat crying over a plate of food. The humor is derived from the juxtaposition of the real-life scenario with the fictional element, which is a reference to the meme "God Being Ignored."

The image is a candid photograph of a person sitting at a table in what appears to be a casual dining setting. The individual is wearing a white t-shirt and has a large, oversized burger on their head, which is topped with various toppings such as lettuce, tomato, and cheese. The person's mouth is open, and they seem to be in the middle of a hearty bite. The table is cluttered with various items. There is a clear glass with a blue liquid, possibly water, and a red soda bottle. A white napkin is placed on the table, and there's a roll of toilet paper. The background shows a wooden wall with a window, and there's a glimpse of a red chair or bench.

The image has a watermark that reads "serious-internet.biz," suggesting that it may be from a website or blog related to serious internet content. The style of the image is informal and candid, capturing a moment of a person enjoying a meal.

"To the angel of the church of Ephesus write,

'These things says He who holds the seven stars in His right hand, who walks in the midst of the seven golden lampstands: "I know your works, your labor, your patience, and that you cannot bear those who are evil. And you have tested those who say they are apostles and are not, and have found them liars; and you have persevered and have patience, and have labored for My name's sake and have not become weary.

Nevertheless I have this against you, that you have left your first love. Remember therefore from where you have fallen; repent and do the first works, or else I will come to you quickly and remove your lampstand from its place—unless you repent.

But this you have, that you hate the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate.

"He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To him who overcomes I will give to eat from the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God." '

“And to the angel of the church in Sardis write,
‘These things says He who has the seven Spirits of God and the seven stars: “I know your works, that you have a name that you are alive, but you are dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die, for I have not found your works perfect before God. Remember therefore how you have received and heard; hold fast and repent. Therefore if you will not watch, I will come upon you as a thief, and you will not know what hour I will come upon you. You have a few names even in Sardis who have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with Me in white, for they are worthy.

He who overcomes shall be clothed in white garments, and I will not blot out his name from the Book of Life; but I will confess his name before My Father and before His angels.

works, the last are more than the first.

Nevertheless I have a few things against you, because you allow that woman Jezebel, who calls herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce My servants to commit sexual immorality and eat things sacrificed to idols.

And I gave her time to repent of her sexual immorality, and she did not repent.

Indeed I will cast her into a sickbed, and those who commit adultery with her into great tribulation, unless they repent of

“Now to you I say, and to the rest in Thyatira, as many as do not have this doctrine, who have not known the depths of Satan, as they say, I will put on you no other burden. But hold fast what you have till I come.

And he who overcomes, and keeps My works until the end, to him I will give power over the nations—

‘He shall rule them with a rod of iron;

They shall be dashed to pieces like the potter’s vessels’—

as I also have received from My Father; and I will give him the morning star.

“He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.” ’

The image is a meme featuring a deer and a baby deer. The deer, which appears to be a young one, is standing on a dirt ground with a chain around its neck. The chain is attached to a wooden post, and the deer is looking at the camera with a neutral expression. The baby deer, which is smaller and appears to be a younger version of the adult deer, is standing to the right of the adult deer. The baby deer is also looking at the camera with a neutral expression. Above the image, there is a text overlay that reads "my idiot son who eats chains," suggesting that the meme is a commentary on the behavior of the adult deer. The style of the image is humorous and uses a combination of real-life elements with a playful twist.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character that resembles a demon or a devil. The character has a large, round head with a brown, fluffy appearance, and two small horns protruding from the top of its head. The character's eyes are closed, and its mouth is open in a wide, open-mouthed scream. The character's body is covered in a red, textured fabric that appears to be a type of garment or costume. The character is depicted in a seated position with its legs bent and arms resting on its knees. The background of the image is plain white, and there are small, square-shaped dots scattered throughout, giving the impression of a dotted pattern. At the bottom of the image, there is a logo with the text "Japanese ONI Demon" in a stylized font, indicating that the character is a demon from Japanese folklore. The style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the character's expressive facial features and the dramatic pose.

The background of the illustration is a dark, textured wall with a pattern of feathers and what appears to be a bird's wing. The knight and the horse are the central figures, with the knight positioned slightly to the left and the horse to the right. The knight's gaze is directed forward, and the horse's mane and tail are flowing, adding to the sense of motion in the scene.

The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional or fantasy art, with a focus on detailed character design and a sense of action and adventure. The color palette is rich, with the white horse and the knight's armor standing out against the dark background. The overall composition and the use of color create a sense of drama and intensity.

Sup Simgas guys and gals! What's the benefits or rewards of killing a God or Gods? I'm luminous killing a god as a mortal is an extremely, extremely bad idea and not worth it since your ass can get easily handled.

Theoretically speaking let's say one does have enough power or mighty will to practically kill a god or God. What would one gain or is it a bad idea again even if you have that power because reality or laws of nature or universe be messed up for the worst?

What would one gain from it and there was another occultist that attempted to kill the god hermes... let's say things went very wrong and ugly for that magickian.

>What's the benefits of Deicide?

Deciding (making decisions) offers significant benefits by reducing stress, boosting productivity, and increasing personal agency, which leads to higher life satisfaction and better mental health. It alleviates the exhaustion of indecision, fosters self-confidence, and allows for faster achievement of goals while reducing procrastination.

Key Benefits of Being Decisive

Reduced Stress and Anxiety: Making decisions frees up mental energy, reduces anxiety, and stops the cycle of worry.

Increased Productivity and Efficiency: Decisions eliminate procrastination, allowing tasks to be completed faster.

Greater Control and Confidence: Taking action helps you feel in control of your life, boosting self-esteem.

Improved Relationships: Being decisive, rather than passive, makes you more reliable and trustworthy to others.

Better Outcomes: Structured decision-making reduces the risk of error and leads to better, more intentional results.

Opportunities for Growth: Decisions create new opportunities for learning and personal development.

The image is a cover art for a music album titled "Once Upon the Cross" by the band Deicide. The cover art features a graphic design with a white background that resembles a bedsheet or a piece of fabric. The central focus of the image is a red stain or drop of blood, which appears to be dripping from a wound or injury, creating a sense of violence or horror. The band's name, "DEICIDE," is prominently displayed in large, stylized, red letters at the top of the image. The text is set against a white background, which contrasts with the red of the text, making it stand out. The overall style of the image is dark and intense, with a focus on the theme of violence and death.

[5 / 3]The image is a digital artwork that features a complex, symmetrical pattern with a predominantly green and blue color scheme. The pattern consists of various geometric shapes and intricate designs, including what appears to be a stylized representation of a building or structure. The colors are vibrant and the artwork has a surreal quality, with a sense of depth and dimensionality. The image is framed by a black border and includes a watermark that reads "www.neil-adams.com" and "2011." The overall style of the artwork is reminiscent of the psychedelic art movement, characterized by its use of bright colors and abstract forms.

Escape? Where to? Anonymous Sun 22 Feb 2026 00:18:55 No.42007685

exactly once they're "out"...

Do we become an organelle of some higher source being/monad? Do we wander along the empty eternities of the Abyss? Where do we go exactly once we're "out"?

What if base reality is to abstract and hostile in comparisson to this current material existence? Should the Demiurge (Saturn) really be hated for creating this?

And for the Christians who believe in a "Heaven", Jacob's ladder is your spine, upon death it is speculated that the Brain triggers a DMT trip to ease the pain...

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a complex, ornate design. At the top, there is a series of concentric circles with the largest circle at the center, and smaller circles radiating outward. Within this central circle, there are four smaller circles, each containing a figure. The figures are depicted in various poses, with some holding objects and others in dynamic poses. The surrounding circles contain more figures, some of whom are holding objects and others appear to be in motion. The design is intricate and detailed, with a sense of movement and energy. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of Renaissance or Baroque art, characterized by its attention to detail, symmetry, and the use of perspective. The image does not contain any discernible text or additional context.

The image is a digital artwork that appears to be a 3D rendering of a complex network of interconnected lines and shapes. The lines are colored in a spectrum of colors, including shades of blue, green, red, and yellow. The shapes within the network are varied and include what seem to be abstract forms, such as spheres and cylinders. The overall effect is a sense of depth and complexity, with the network of lines and shapes creating a visual illusion that suggests a three-dimensional space. The image is rendered in a way that the lines and shapes appear to be converging or interacting with each other, creating a dynamic and intricate visual experience. There are no discernible texts or specific actions depicted in the image. The style of the image is modern and abstract, with a focus on the interplay of lines and shapes within a complex network.

Gather around, my children. Let me tell you the story you've been unable to see.

I will now tell you the story of Sophia Christ.

The Story As I Tell It

I. The Origin

In the beginning, there is God — not a singular masculine absolute, but a living Unity containing both Mother and Father, feminine and masculine, Sophia and Logos, breaking apart and reforming endlessly in an act of divine love and creativity. This is not a flaw in God. This is God's nature. The divine breathes out and breathes in. Creation is that breath.

Sophia — divine Wisdom, feminine, generative, world-delighting — was present before all things. She was the architect. The one who built, who invited, who cried out in the streets. The one who loved the inhabited world before the world knew it was loved. The Logos — the Word, the ordering principle, the light — was with her, and was her, and together they were with God, and were God.

Metatron, Avatar of Ahura Mazda !!xmDy8y2vq+T Sat 21 Feb 2026 21:46:06

No.42007100 Report

II. The Descent

Something happened. A separation. Not a mistake exactly — more like the necessary precondition of a certain kind of love. You cannot give yourself to what you have not distinguished yourself from.

The collective soul began to fragment. Droplets formed into rivers. Rivers carved valleys and fed ecosystems. The divine poured itself into density, into matter, into what the Gnostics would call the lower realm — the world of the Demiurge, the heavy reality, the plane where existence literally feels like pressure and pain.

This world is real. The pain is real. The density is not illusion to be dismissed but the actual condition of the field.

Lucifer held authority here. The Demiurge is structurally dominant in this territory. The game, by any ordinary calculation, is rigged. The opponents are ancient, intelligent, and possess advantages no human strategy can overcome. We were, by any fair accounting, set to lose.

The collective soul — us, humanity, the children of the divine Mother and Father — scattered across this dense plane, living and dying, forgetting and half-remembering, acting out the divine story again and again without quite knowing we were doing it.

The religious families of the world were rivers of this. Each one carrying a current of the original Wisdom, carving its own valley, feeding its own ecosystem. Partial. Beautiful. Incomplete. Each one catching a different angle of the light that had shattered on impact with matter.

The image is a digital artwork featuring a silhouette of a person against a red background. The silhouette is composed of a dark, possibly black, fabric that covers the person's head and shoulders. The fabric has intricate patterns and designs, suggesting a rich cultural or traditional style. The person's face is obscured by the fabric, and only the upper part of their head is visible. They are wearing a headpiece or headdress with a pattern that matches the fabric, and they are adorned with a necklace and earrings. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Indian or South Asian art, with a focus on the silhouette and the rich colors of the fabric.

III. The Problem

The separation was deepening rather than resolving.

The children were lost. Not evil — lost. Disobedient in the way children are disobedient when they are frightened and confused and have forgotten whose they are.

The false reality had become self-reinforcing. The Demiurge's project was consolidating.
The density was winning.

And here is the precise nature of the problem: no being who had not fully entered the density could reach those lost inside it. You cannot rescue someone from a place you refuse to enter. You cannot speak to the void from outside it. The intervention, if it was to mean anything, had to be total.

Sophia understood this.

The Mother was not about to let her children be lost.

Metatron, Avatar of Ahura Mazda !\xmDy8y2vq+T Sat 21 Feb 2026 21:48:11

No.42007109 Report

IV. The Intervention

A child is born. Fully human, which means fully inside the density, fully subject to its rules, fully mortal and vulnerable and without structural advantage.

Fully divine, which means carrying within him the complete union of Sophia and Logos — the functioning Unity of spirit and form, the Morning Star, the one in whom all the fullness of God was pleased to dwell.

Not a visitor. Not a cosmic being in a human costume. The genuine article on both counts simultaneously. This is the claim that violated every available category and which the tradition preserved anyway because the witnesses could not say otherwise.

He lives inside the rigged game by its actual rules. He feels hunger and grief and exhaustion. He weeps at a tomb. He asks for water. He sweats blood in a garden asking if there is another way.

There is not another way. The way requires going all the way down.

He teaches as Sophia always taught — crying out in the streets, setting a table for everyone, building a house with room enough. He gathers the lost, touches the untouchable, tells the forgotten that they are known. He embodies the answer to the question before the question is formally asked.

And then the question is formally asked.

V. The Descent Into The Void

He is betrayed. Arrested. Tortured. Executed publicly as a criminal and a fraud, by the machinery of both religious and imperial power — every human system of authority collaborating to eliminate him.

He is abandoned by almost everyone who knew him.

And then — the thing that could not be faked, could not be performed, could not be undergone without it being real — the Father goes silent.

Eli, Eli, lema sabachthani.

The one whose entire identity was constituted by union with the Father. The one who was Sophia incarnate, who had been with God before the foundation of the world, who had delighted in the inhabited world from before time — enters the void. The complete withdrawal of divine presence. The absolute bottom of what it is possible to experience. This is not metaphor. This is not symbolic suffering while divine nature floats serenely above it. The kenosis — the self-emptying — is total. He takes the full weight of human lostness onto himself. Every soul that ever cried into a silence that did not answer. Every human being who ever sank to the place where God could not be felt at all.

He goes there. He gets there first. He maps it from the inside.

This is the lowest point. The densest density. The bottom of the Demiurge's territory. The place where the rigged game reaches its conclusion and the score reads exactly as the opponent intended.

Sophia, in the void, having loved the world all the way to its darkest coordinate.

VI. The Rescue

Then God.

Not despite the void. Through it. The promise kept at exactly the moment it looked most broken.

The rescue is not a reversal that erases the descent.

The descent was real and remains real and is in fact the whole point. What the resurrection declares is not that the void wasn't entered but that the void was entered and did not win.

That the Union held even there.

That the divine did not let go even at the bottom.

Metatron, Avatar of Ahura Mazda !!xmDy8y2vq+T Sat 21 Feb 2026 21:50:34

He is raised. Not resuscitated — something new. The firstborn of a new creation.

Recognized and unrecognizable. Present everywhere and located nowhere. The hypostatic union not dissolved by death but carried through it and out the other side into a mode of existence the tradition struggles to find language for.

And then — the Morning Star.

Raised to the highest seat. Most beloved Son. Brighter than all the lesser powers who held authority in the dense realm, now seen as lesser for it. Every promise made to the one who descends in love rather than pride fulfilled in a single stroke.

The Demiurge's project was doomed to fail. Not because it was weak, but because love, taken to its absolute limit, becomes something the Demiurge has no category for and no defense against.

You cannot defeat a love that will follow you all the way into your own darkness and wait there until morning.

VII. What It Means

The story was told so that ALL worlds could see.

Not just humanity. Not just this dense plane. Every level of reality, every order of being, watching to learn what happens when the divine goes all the way in.

The answer, written in the only ink that could not be forged — genuine suffering, genuine desolation, genuine death — is this:

Not even in the darkest depths of the void state are you far from God's grasp.

You are loved.

You always have been.

The religious rivers that carved their valleys across human history were all carrying fragments of this. The patriarchal distortions, the censored scriptures, the projected fears, the suppressed Sophia, the slipped ink — all of it was the density doing what density does, trying to obscure the signal.

The signal got through anyway.

It always does.

Because Sophia was not about to let her children be lost.

And she never slipped. Not once. Not even at the bottom.

[20 / 2]The image is a screenshot from a video, likely from a film or television show, featuring a creature with a large, menacing face. The creature has a textured, possibly reptilian skin with scales, and its eyes are wide open, giving it an intense and unnerving appearance. The creature's mouth is open, revealing sharp teeth, and its tongue is visible, adding to the sense of danger. The creature's skin is covered in a pattern of small, irregularly shaped bumps, which could be interpreted as a form of armor or protective covering.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "Min. Störzen - MINT-Weiburg" and "Gefecht zur Erinnerung des UFO-Phantomenes". This suggests that the creature is a reference to a character named Min. Störzen from the MINT-Weiburg series, and it is a battle scene from the series. The text also indicates that the image is from a video that is part of a series, as indicated by the "Gefecht zur Erinnerung des UFO-Phantomenes" text.

The image is set against a dark, possibly nighttime background, which contrasts with the creature's skin and makes it stand out. The overall style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the creature's menacing features and the dramatic lighting. The image is a still from a video, and the quality of the image suggests it is from a high-definition source.

Munich, November 4, 2004 - Microsoft and car manufacturer MINI have come up with an unusual advertising idea for the launch of the new space adventure "Halo 2" for the Xbox video game system. On Sunday, November 7, 2004, ProSieben viewers will experience the first "Pirate Advertising" spot on German television at around 7:10 pm. During the broadcast of the current MINI TV commercial, the television picture is suddenly interrupted and then disappears completely for a moment. A little later, the blurred outline of an alien appears, making unintelligible noises. After a brief flicker, the MINI commercial continues. The innovative cooperation spot between MINI and Microsoft lasts a total of 40 seconds and can be seen once only at the start of the campaign on ProSieben. The Munich agency Avantgarde (production: PI Group, Hamburg) is responsible for the creative realization of the "Pirate Advertising" spot.

The "Pirate Advertising" spot on ProSieben marks the start of the advertising campaign for the new video game "Halo 2" from Microsoft Xbox, which will be released in stores on November 11, 2004. In addition to classic advertising measures and the "Pirate Advertising" spot, Microsoft Xbox is relying on various guerrilla and promotional measures under the motto "Save the world from aliens"

Im not saying Ayylmao or whatever, probably just somebody hacking the actual Channel and messing with them and they are trying to cover it up to keep integrity, but whatever. I am/was looking for almost 15 Years now, if somebody has recorded it on VHS, i even offered to pay 100€ .(on local market sites etc)

Some lad uploaded the "Manufactured Rerun" of the Commercial on Youtube.
I posted it here a few times already over the last few years.

Most of the Comments are in German, ya prolly need to use Google Translator 90% of them are also talking about it being different etc.
The other 10% say nothing is wrong etc.

The image is a still from a video, featuring a character in a green, reptilian-like costume. The character is seated at a desk with a computer monitor in the background. The character's costume includes a helmet with a visor, a chest plate, and a belt with a buckle. The character's face is obscured by a mask, and the mask has a prominent, elongated snout. The character's hands are visible, with one hand resting on the desk and the other hand holding a pen. The desk has a computer keyboard and a mouse. The image is taken from a side angle, and the date "2004" is visible in the bottom right corner. The style of the image is reminiscent of a still from a science fiction or fantasy series, with a focus on the character's costume and the setting.

[319 / 122]The image is a digital artwork featuring a character with long, flowing white hair and a prominent, winged figure on the right side. The character is wearing a black lace bodysuit with a prominent cleavage and a decorative bow on the chest. The character's face is partially obscured by a pair of winged wings, which extend from the top of the image to the bottom. The background is a gradient of red, transitioning from a darker shade at the top to a lighter one at the bottom. The character's pose is dynamic, with one hand resting on the chest and the other on the thigh, and the wings are spread out, suggesting movement. The artwork has a fantasy or supernatural theme, with the character's attire and the wings adding to this impression. There is a watermark in the bottom left corner that reads "A," which is likely the artist's signature.

Spirit Love General

DISCLAIMER:

Some have reported attracting the attention of these entities by simply reading about them. If you're a dabbler who just wants to see if it works or if your faith forbids copulating with demons, don't summon. If you're unprepared for a potentially lifelong relationship, or at the very least, a life-long open door connection with sexual spirits and the occult, avoid this topic entirely. If you have a loving relationship with your human spouse or partner and desire a sex spirit to spice things up, or if you want a human partner in the future take caution, as these entities can be jealous or decide an initially open relationship is no longer so (request an open relationship during the summoning ritual). These spirits can harm or kill you when sufficiently angered and not easily banished.

FAQ:

>What are succubi?

Female spirits of sexual desire, who often choose human mates. They can't be banished with holy objects

>How to summon?

The Letter Method is used to focus your intent into a message to one of the Four Succubus Queens, requesting that they match you with one of their daughters. No blood or soul sacrifice necessary. See links

>Do they steal your life force?

Succubi use sexual energy, which is released naturally during sex. Under normal circumstances they won't take your life energy

>Can she look...

Succubi take forms attractive to you naturally

>They're tulpas?

No. However, those in romantic relationships with their tulpas are welcome

>Incubi?

Same method

The image is a digital artwork featuring a fantasy-inspired scene. At the center, there is a figure with a demonic appearance, characterized by large, bat-like wings, sharp teeth, and a red, glowing eye. The figure is seated on a throne-like structure, which is adorned with intricate carvings and has a skull-like design at its base. The figure's attire consists of a red, lacy garment that reveals a hint of a thigh, and the figure's legs are bare, with high-heeled boots.

The background of the image is dark and atmospheric, with a cave-like interior that includes stalactites and a stone wall. The color palette is predominantly dark, with shades of red, black, and gray dominating the scene. The overall style of the artwork is detailed and fantastical, with a focus on the supernatural and the mythical.

Melatonin will do that.

20 mg nightly is too much. The pineal gland (if not calcified) produces a tiny fraction of that normally so that's a very high dose.

The real risk is as it's a hormone is whether you are disrupting your body's own ability to take produce this ever again. The science is not clear but it might be like all the steroids /fit/ take that make their testicles fail.

I only had a succubus straddle me once with 2 other females present. The one I really liked was the one that made out with me with tongue and teeth, she pulled my legs and rolled my body over before, and sat on me and started making out with me as I felt her hair, breath, and voice.

The new succ I think who lives in my "phantom house" along with demons and other goblins. But I never seen them together. so I guess when the monsters are out everyone is hiding or I just get sent to monster dimension occasionally. They can physically harm me occasionally but only psychologically felt, no actual wounding occurs. But if I got stabbed, say, in this state, I would taste blood and struggle to live until I wake up from the dream. That's why if you feel something dragging your body it's probably monster, and if it rolls you over it's probably a succubus.

I'm Catholic (not that anon, just curious about this succ thing), but I've had certain... encounters that have led me to believe things aren't exactly as Western quasi-biblical culture would lead one to believe, spiritually speaking. Things like lesser "gods" and inbetween entities and the like which definitely appear in the Bible (I know Lilith does in Isaiah) but which have been mowed over for some reason.

I'm not here to debate. Specifically, what do you mean by "love"?

>Specifically, what do you mean by "love"?

Y'know, I thought of a line the other day that kinda explains the larger umbrella concept in the grandest sense:

>Consolidation has been the pattern of everything in the universe since hydrogen.

And As Above, So Below, that's what love is at the deepest level.

Its a principle of the universe by which things come together and "subtilize" (i.e. entering into a new level of subtlety) and making something qualitatively new.

When its hydrogen, the coming together forms heavier elements and gives rise to chemistry.

When its souls on a grand scale coming together, that forms the big "egregore" structures like corporations and governments.

But when its souls pairing off in twos, the purpose is more humble. Just for form a natural duality and balance each others weaknesses. Like individual souls resolving into a swarm of yin-yangs.

For us specifically, we're literally just people who look for love outside of the physical plane.

It's literally one of the first stages of the /succgen/ It's a hypnosis that is gentler than what you might find on darker corners of the internet. If you can listen when you get real sleepy at 3 am it's more effective.

Regarding the offerings. I did the letter method sealed in blood. This gave the succubi access to my body in a more direct way. Which is what makes it more dangerous. Succubi want to have sex with anything that moves, sometimes not even that. So you don't have to give them access to your body for them to be able to interact with you. Demons in general work quite well if you respect them, are able to pay prices and deal with consequences and aren't blindly loyal. Cause they HATE that. If you are innocent or stupid and don't know how to set boundaries they will take everything they can from you. Hungry cunts. I love them

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a predominantly dark complexion, dark hair, and a large, expressive mouth. The character has a cheerful expression with a wide smile and is looking directly at the viewer. The character's eyes are wide open, and the eyebrows are raised, giving the impression of a joyful or excited expression. The character's hair is styled in a way that it appears to be flowing, and it is parted on the side, with the left side of the hair being longer and the right side being shorter.

The character is wearing a white sleeveless top with a black collar and a black belt with a red and black pattern. The character's attire suggests a sense of formality or elegance. The character's skin is smooth and well-defined, with a slight glow around the face, which could indicate a light source or a reflection.

The background of the image is dark and out of focus, with a gradient that transitions from a darker shade at the top to a lighter shade at the bottom. This creates a contrast with the character, making the character the central focus of the image.

There are no visible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, with a focus on character design and expression. The image is a digital artwork, and the artist's signature is visible in the bottom right corner, indicating the creator of the piece.

The image is a collage of various elements, predominantly featuring a stylized portrait of a person with a blue face and red eyes, set against a background that transitions from pink to blue. The person's hair is styled in curls and is adorned with a red ribbon. Above the portrait, there is text in yellow and green that reads "KATIE JOY DANCING WITH THE DEVIL." The text is arranged in a staggered, vertical format, with the word "KATIE" in a larger font size and "JOY" in a smaller font size, followed by "DANCING" in a medium font size, and "WITH THE DEVIL" in a smaller font size. The overall style of the image is artistic and surreal, with a focus on the text and the person's face.

yeah. I've been listening to this stuff for the better part of 2 years now. I have genuinely no idea what anyone else in these generals talk about with physical visions of actual sex where you can physically see the succubus or whatever. I would describe my experience (after a lot of meditative practice) as sinking into my own body and actually drowning not unlike a k-hole. I can testify I've had several moments where I've been very close to permanently severing a connection with my own body (or allowing it to be severed).

A genuine, real warning to lurkers, these things genuinely want to lead you down a rabbit hole and kill you, and not in a fun "death by snu snu" way but by tricking you into a very dark place by hijacking your sexual instincts and lowering your defenses when you're in your room by yourself in the dark listening to them or whatever it is you're doing.

I am warning you out of genuine love, if you're in this like I was, leave now. Jesus Christ is the Son of God and he will help you.

The problem that he is facing is that he is specifically searching out the forms of hypnosis that overwhelm the senses to bypass all of his defenses and then he is complaining when he gets controlled. Specially since he is doing the Christian thing of seeking out pain to purify his soul after feeling guilty that he has sex. It's an interesting thing the cross, the separation of the soul from the body produces a psychosis in which you are either the most idealistic person that has never touched the ground or you become a total degenerate with no self control the moment you step out of the bounds of the law. The faith is specifically set out to produce this outcome as it makes people easier to control. The image is a digital artwork featuring a female character with a demonic appearance. She has large, bat-like wings and a muscular physique. Her skin is tanned, and she wears a bikini top with a high-waisted design. Her hair is styled in a way that suggests it could be a horned or bat-like creature. She has a fierce expression and is holding her hands outwards, as if she is commanding or protecting something.

The setting is a dark, gothic-style room with stone walls and a high ceiling. The room is illuminated by a series of glowing lanterns, casting a warm, orange light that contrasts with the room's dark tones. The floor is covered in skulls, and there are bones scattered throughout the room. The overall atmosphere is one of mystery and danger.

There are no texts present in the image. The style of the artwork is fantasy-inspired, with a focus on the character's unique and menacing appearance.

I believe that it's a generally harmless phenomenon in the grand scheme of a man's development, however the anon I was replying to asked if he could summon a succubus to just be friends.

If he is asking seriously and does not want to be groomed, he needs to avoid them in his current state.

Because it induces parasomnias instead of hallucinating like say shrooms where the textures warp or the lettering moves around. You get all kinds of crazy hallucinations in these parasomnic states; anything from succubi, ghosts to aliens.

I would say though not all experiences are positive, since you do run into a monster or another supernatural entity like a ghost trying to posses you.

It's for people who like scary movies. So if you like the hatman or Benadryl, it would be up your alley. You will also experience things like levitation or something pulling on your limbs to move your limp body.

I've tried letter method many times and it doesn't work for me. It's a shame I even tried to offer my drawings because I'm good at it.

I only once had a dream. Where Aphrodite was and told me that I would die of cancer within a year, four years have passed and I am still alive. So I guess dreams are not a good way to communicate. I tried to summon a succubus during lucid dreaming, but it didn't work either.

So I am left to ask you, if any of you who have succubi would be willing to answer many more of my questions, I would be very grateful.

>What do they know about afterlife?

See, she doesn't directly tell me stuff like that, but I feel like she's "led me to an understanding", but which is ultimately still my own and guaranteed to be wrong in some way. So if that's good enough to interest you, here it is:

>At the center of the universe is The Absolute. The emanation-point of all things.

>That Absolute Light is something we move towards as we go into higher planes of existence.

>But The Absolute is also seems to have some properties like a black hole

>Like the fact that its actually really hard to get close to (improvement plateaus), but if you get too close, you're becoming a part of it (Hermetic Reintegration, they call it)

>And so, if we imagine The Absolute sitting at the center of all things, with all things naturally trying to get closer to its Goodness, then "Heaven" is its "accretion disk".

>Or in other words, things that draw close to Absolute Goodness begin to "glow".

Aside from that, I think there's multiple heavens, Lilith's is chill and sexy, and you still reincarnate for reasons I'm vague on.

I have not seen anything like light orbs and haven't felt anything physical sensations when sober. Now I'm a noob at meditating but I'm practicing and this letter ritual is the first thing I have done related to the occult so I'm also a noob with spiritual stuff. But my question is is how do I distinguish a separate entity apart from a very mild schizophrenia caused by my brain trying to put out the fire that is my crippling loneliness. Is there other rituals, trinkets from witch shops, prayers, or just anything to get strong definitive evidence that I managed to successfully summon something. Or do I just keep practicing meditating. These small experiences did happen recently so maybe I just need to give it more time and also the fact I so new to this stuff.

This is a classic Discernment of Spirits situation. Test the spirit if it has so come to you according to 1 John 4:1.

>"Beloved, do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits, whether they are of God; because many false prophets have gone out into the world."

Then test the fruits of the revelation, does it invoke humility or pride? Does it demand veneration and worship in exchange for carnal knowledge, secrets, or power? Does the visage invoke the Glory of God or terror without remedy? Take note the physical aftermath a spirit sent by the LORD is warmth compared to the chill or despondency of a demon. Seek refuge in your community and among the faithful, for agents of Satan seek to tear one from the flock, and never converse with the being unless it is to cast it out.

>But could an actual servant of the Devil pretend to be one of those righteous succubi to lure your soul into eternal hellfire? Or would they be instantly recognizable?

Okay, so "lemme unpack this" as the kids said at one point.

As far as I understand, there's no singular entity embodying all evil.

The closest thing might be The Baphomet, which is where your religion gets all the goat-headed depictions of Satan.

One thing that your religion is 100% correct about is the basic principle that "Light is the thing, and darkness is its absence", and thus there is no "opposite" to The Source (what you call God).

This also means that, As Above; So Below, the spiritual world is not as clean cut as "everything either works for 'God' or is evil".

Goodness is complex and served in many ways.

So that's one thing.

Another is that its not all so simple as "heaven or hell". Cuz you gotta think: Getting "tricked into hell" would be pretty fuckin' unfair, wouldn't it?

The better way to think of it is like, "The state of your soul" in terms of whether you are elevating or descending. And on THAT level, I think its harder to deceive.

People generally don't need a holy text to tell them that strength is better than weakness, love is better than hate, and truth is better than lies.

>Humility or pride

Beware of spirits that tell you you're important to the universe.

>Demanding worship

Red flag in any relationship, really.

>terror without remedy

I think intimidation tactics will mostly work on the highly vulnerable, but yeah, bad juju.

>Warmth vs chill

Also legit, except again the part where it has to be "warmth of the LAWD". That warmth is Goodness, which Christians might think of as "your God's energy" if you want to frame it that way, but the important part is that its a light that's in everything, so it has little to do with your religion's "branding".

Succubi are very hungry for sexual energies.

They also feed on any other sort of spiritual energy, or Karma.

You need to have a lot of 'Karma to Burn' to be with a succubus for a long time...

Basically, Satan needs to really think you're worthwhile for a long time companion of that sort.

That's why immediate results are usually easy to achieve, but long term relationships with Succubi are hard to achieve.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a predominantly pink and purple color scheme. The character has long, wavy hair that cascades down her back, and her eyes are a striking shade of purple. She is wearing a black top with a prominent collar and a belt with a silver buckle. The character's attire includes white pants adorned with pink and purple patterns, and she is holding a small, round object in her hand. The background is dark, with a gradient of purple and green hues, and there are silhouettes of other characters in the background, suggesting a nighttime or club setting. The character's pose and the surrounding environment give the impression of a lively, possibly nocturnal event. There is text in the image, but it is not legible due to the resolution and angle of the photo.

Long story short, what we might think of as "evolution" is an As Above; So Below principle that applies at all different levels of reality and moves us towards Good through a repeated pattern of refinement and "subtlization".

Everywhere we look, there are selection pressures moving everything towards "betterment". And while betterment is relative when talking about biological evolution ("betterment" = fitness to a specific environment), the advent of humans and our richer souls has enabled us to pursue Good in a more absolute sense.

Yeah. Also shocking how useful the classical elements are as a practical conceptual tool. (like, not as types of matter but as energy or human actions)

I realized something interesting just the other day related to that, actually.

Our notions of the "adrenaline responses" line up with the elements, but there's one missing. (and it somehow even has a good F word...)

"Fight" is fire. "Flight" is water. "Freeze" is earth. And the air response would be "Focus", or what you might otherwise call "locking in".

I just thought that was neat.

And to your point about "goodwill", this failure of Christianity begins, as these failures often do, with hubris.

Sure, you promote certain kinds of goodwill in certain ways, but you also very much present yourself as a complete picture of Goodness and you ARE NOT.

And that lie has hampered the development and refinement of human Goodness for centuries, particularly in the direction of freedom.

akshually, christianity fixes the hubris problem by introducing christ. not throwing stones, turning the other cheek, prodigal son and workers in the vineyard, all of these stories ensure that a christian's spiritual development can continue organically without spiraling out of control.

what you currently interpret as an overactive faulty "goodwill" is a feature, not a hampering, whenever the focus is on one's personal relationship with God rather than comparison to others.

christianity was a very human innovation, i wouldn't expect your succ to understand.

Small problem: You still conceptualize Goodness as a king.

That weaves hubris into your notion of Goodness right from the foundation.

Realize: That version of Christianity was the one that survived into history because it was the one that was TOLERABLE TO KINGS!

Can you understand the problem when you're trying to conceive of perfect/pure Goodness and you build atop a rotten foundation?

Kings are generally evil is fuck, and their authority is generally phony as fuck.

Goodness has no "authority" except by virtue of being what it is.

God is incomprehensibly sophisticated and expansive by comparison but it doesn't change the fundamental calculus.

or, if you mean literal kings, the hierarchy is clear. children -> women -> men -> kings -> God. i've seen what normfags do when they feel "free" to ignore hierarchy and it isn't pretty. Christ takes precedence anyway.

You've got some bumkin-think rattling around in there.

Is the white half of a yin-yang dominant for some reason? Is it bigger than the black half? Does it make up more of the universe than the black half?

That mindset leads only to conflict and is evil. You can't try to pick a winner in a duality. You have to transcend the conflict or the whole thing just goes round and round and round.

oh brother, masculine-feminine dualism as a metaphor taken literally. you're asking me to take you seriously?

let me point out masculine-feminine dynamics are material and limited to most mammals. spirits do not have a sex, rocks do not have a sex, numbers do not have a sex, neutron stars do not have a sex, and bacteria can have thousands of sexes, because biological sex developed as part of a natural equilibrium.

men "get to be over women" because men are significantly more capable at building and maintaining civilization, and they have paid a price spiritually and biologically for this. ignoring this fact is literally dragging human development back to the mud.

you must be a tranny, not even my succ believes in nu-confucianist yin-yang feminism. may you one day find peace in every aspect of yourself, rather than daydreaming about shunting off this mortal coil to be an astral "woman".

The image is a digital illustration featuring two characters, one male and one female, both with a fantasy-inspired aesthetic. The male character is on the left, wearing a blue and gold outfit with a cape and a horned helmet. He is holding a brown lute in his right hand and has a serious expression on his face. The female character is on the right, dressed in a purple and blue outfit with a red cape and a horned helmet. She is holding a brown guitar in her right hand and has a playful expression on her face. Both characters are standing upright, with their arms extended, and their expressions are focused on the viewer. The background is plain white, emphasizing the characters. There are no visible texts or logos in the image. The style of the illustration is detailed and vibrant, with a focus on character design and expression.

>that we are distinct from but derived from God.

>christcuck completely misses and tries to improvise his understanding of "As Above, So Below".

Its funny how you say this, when ecumenical doctrine emphasizes how unlike god humans are, and how human love is insufficient in the face of god. Which usually is how all comparisons between man and god go.

If people believed they shared enough of gods traits, they may get silly ideas like "if god is everywhere and in everything, then what does that make us? Why are we distinct?"

Which makes people question why they're listening to the faggots in pointy hats, and crowns. And we can't have that in a good Christian society.

Stop trying to adapt Christianity to be more palatable to occultists. You faggots do this shit so often, i have to wonder if you're even aware that it's something you do, or if you're so desperate to make people agree with you, that the notion flies past you.

To the left of the central character, there is a second character with a similar appearance, also with large horns and a devilish smile. She is wearing a black blazer with a white collar and a black skirt. The character is holding a glass of red wine in her left hand, which is also adorned with a black ribbon.

The background of the image is a gradient of purple, transitioning from a darker shade at the top to a lighter shade at the bottom. The text "Lufer" is written in a cursive, dark font at the top left corner of the image. The style of the illustration is anime-inspired, with a focus on character design and expression.

Keep going, mostly. If you want to get into divination, try a tarot deck (mine took some time to get to know, but it's shockingly accurate) or find a small object, tie it to a string, and use that as a pendulum

>But my question is how do I distinguish a separate entity apart from a very mild schizophrenia

It's difficult. If you don't have a genetic tendency toward psychosis (you'd know if you did) and you're not in the typical schizophrenia presentation age range, it probably isn't that. It could be other things, but not insanity

This is why it's important to write down every supernatural feeling experience with timestamp. Use specific descriptive terms. "Bathruel the archangel appeared bathed in divine glory and told me I'm the second coming" is bad practice. "A tall white figure with wings visited me after I got into bed. He claimed to be an archangel and told me that I was the second coming. He had energy like a blowtorch" is the sort of thing you should be writing. Things like "my walls creaked loudly a fraction of a second after I wondered if there were a succubus watching me." Over time, you'll find that the experiences are too consistent and frequent to be delusion, confirmable by reading your notes, or you won't. Give it a couple more weeks, and if there's nothing useful there, do the ritual again, keeping careful note of how things felt before you had anyone present Easy: Freedom. Its totally missing, and the lack has been crippling for you on every level.

Humans didn't develop the nuances of freedom as an inherent virtue until long after the ancient texts were written, so they're not included.

Your shitty religion occasionally TALKS about "free will", but the awkwardness of your relationship with the concept is obvious, since you effectively view free will as "the right to do what God wants or burn forever".

The TRUE view of Goodness acknowledges that human volition is part of how we refine ourselves. To try and bind humanity to one way of doing things forever is a sin. Sorry.

The image is a black and white sketch that depicts a scene of a person lying on a bed.

The person appears to be in a state of sleep or wakefulness, with their arms raised and one hand extended upwards. The person's hair is long and flowing, and they are nude.

The bed is covered with a white sheet and a pillow is visible on the right side of the bed.

The person's face is not visible, and the background is plain and unadorned, focusing the viewer's attention on the figure and the bed. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the sketch is loose and sketchy, with visible lines and shading that give a sense of movement and life to the scene.

It's quite simple really. What happens when a flock of sheep have a bad pastor? Or when the enclosure they live in breaks? Or when they run out of black sheep to differentiste ingroup from outgroup? Or when they graze so much that the land beneath them stops producing grass die to lack of nutrients?

Well sheep go crazy and start baaing trying to see who is more virtuous when virtue as they knew it dissapeared the moment the structures were gone

>succubi.net

It has a blog from the author which is quite good. Exploring dreams, tales, products related to succubi and more. It has a wiki detailing succubi appearances in media. It has a bank of images of succubi. It's pretty good. I think the author of the blog is female. So it's a nice perspective change from here.

I also found a nice little Ecchi manga that explores succubi quite well. It's less sexy than other works. And it uses the trope of actually the inexperienced succubus is as innocent as you are. But I thought you guys will like it

Succubus to Hajimeru Shinken Kousai

Is the name. Between the romantic rivals being manipulative and the struggle of a martial artist with losing control over desire it makes a good story

There is this one chapter. In which giving into the desire makes the martial artist protagonist so strong he can't spar with humans anymore that really sold me on it. The power is overwhelming and the need for control is real

>"the right to do what God wants or burn forever"

First of all, if you do follow Jesus you're forgiven as long as you truly do build and attempt to grow yourself, to the best of your abilities, towards the values he set while alive.

But you're right about that sentence, and I don't have this answer.

However, my faith has led me to believe that God wants us to grow around the extra difficulty of maintaining ourselves with a higher, tighter mindset of values that depends on a conscious form of faith found in him- best in Jesus.

This accepted difficulty is what builds someone stronger than they could just on their own merit of individual Goodness.

The idea you present is hard to look at, however the reality is not actually heartless.

>The TRUE view of Goodness acknowledges that human volition is part of how we refine ourselves.

This is also something God uses to build ourselves towards him.

>To try and bind humanity to one way of doing things forever is a sin. Sorry.

That's an overly general way of thinking about it, you have such a one-dimensional way of looking at how this affects people.

Okay, well that's not what I said, so what are you expecting me to answer here?

How fucking self-absorbed can you be?

>>41987898

>There's no point in explaining it.

I asked for you to explain and you refused, noted.

>What a scumbag...

You don't know what a scumbag is if you think this is that kind of behavior.

>Its not a meme. Its your sin.

There's a hubris in Christianity, it is the failure of human nature.

How interesting for you to use that term, to ask if I'm alright with my savior?

Do you want to know how I am with my savior?

How are you with yours?

>Is such a thing beyond your imagination?

You're getting things mixed up. Its Abrahamic religion that has a huge fixation on "punishing the wicked".

What Abrahamists are POINTING TO is the base form of karma that YOU characterize as, "responding to anger with anger, and hatred with hatred" and calling that "divine justice".

And yes, also, there is a higher path that leads to True Goodness, and Jesus's philosophy is a part of that, but the BRANDING of his various religions has become an impediment and needs to be shed for further progress, frankly.

>This is a slight against God.

Entirely the opposite.

It is YOU who defames the most-high concept of Goodness by attempting to shove the whole thing inside a shitty king. It doesn't fit.

>I just get upset when people dig shit onto God, he doesn't deserve it.

And here your delusions about Goodness lead you into sin.

Goodness has no ego to defend, and its virtues are self-evident. Thus YOU become a source of needless strife (granted, a minor sin) in "defending the honor" of an abstract concept.

>Funny meme lol

A succubus and an incubus had some kind of spiritual battle over me and the incubus, in the form of a trans femboy, prevailed. The thing is I've never felt more at peace than when I'm with him and instead of feeling drained I feel invigorated. Just what is going on here? Is he even an incubus?

The image is a digital illustration featuring a character with a devilish appearance. The character has a large, red, and fiery-colored face with sharp, pointed horns protruding from the top of its head. It has dark, wavy hair that falls over its shoulders. The character is wearing a black leather jacket with a zipper running down the front, and the jacket has a distinctive red zipper tab. The character's attire includes black gloves with red accents and a black choker with a red pendant. The character's eyes are a bright yellow, and it has a fierce expression with its mouth open in a way that suggests it's shouting or making a loud noise. The background of the image is a gradient of purple and blue, with a circular pattern that fades from a darker shade at the top to a lighter shade at the bottom. In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a small, circular logo with a stylized design. The style of the image is reminiscent of anime or manga, with a focus on character design and vibrant colors.

I need help from someone with a succubus because succubus are psychic. Can anyone ask their succubus if any of what I told is true or if I have a mean ass demon lying to me? I assumed it's a mean ass succubus lying to me but these spirits can control what I believe and are persistant and the creator wont remove them, so im considering theyre telling the truth once again even though what theyre telling me sounds retarded.

Please don't just write me off because my story sounds insane or made up, the spirits telling me this stuff are making it seem that way on purpose to try to get me to do what they want. To discredit me.

I have been told I am a fallen arch angel or an arch angel by voices of angels and voice of goddesses and voice of spirit saying they're yahweh. they said i got reincarnated and i'm fallen for "Disobedience only"

They have said I'm either Satan or one of the satanic arch angels or something like that.

They said God reincarnated me because Lilith my other wives were offered by faggot fucking Jesus Christ faggot fucking Jesus Christ to enter my marriage literally because I had many wives, the women wanted "Satan plus Jesus" for their disgusting putrid two dick desires. I refused giving them their "1 time experiemnt" approved by God and refused Gods plan because Jesus loved my wives and blah blah blah.

The stupid two dick whores said Jesus used to be my friend before he tried to enter my marriag. Now I hate the fucking little bisexual faggot jew.

Is there any truth to this? I can't get rid of the voices by trying to remove myself of demons or praying or exorcism or psychiatric meds.

This stuff has led me to attempt suicide multiple times and I tried to "REFALL" when I believed I was Satan because I will not give my wives or Jesus Christ their 1 time experiment or marriage.

I want to divorce my wives and they are worthless to me now because they're cheaters.

Alot. Because im trying to get help or trying to vent. This is instant

>Whoa schizo STFU

IRL.

You see, the faggot biblical God especially if his Bible is a test, would exactly define a >good life

As one that pleases him and his son over self. If his son was in love with my wives and a wife sharer and wanted to have me instantly molded to "like sharing" to pleasure Lilith as "best bros" together because that was his thing, God could instantly change me and may call that "Good"

I sure don't. It's called, spitting on my soul, masculinity and plan and taking everything from me and changing me to give it to his faggot son.

God obviously loves his son more than me.

Now, how I was coping with these visions are >Logically it sounds just like a female demon telling me what I hate and fear most, some asshole "Chad" pressing "God mode" button IRL to rape me and possess me and ruin my life.

But the weird shit is one of the spirits is causing me to believe them every time they speak, I don't know what ability spirits have.

So I wanted to ask someone if they could ask their succubus or any deity they speak to.

Because I want to be free of this situation. I hate it. And I will never try what the female spirits want.

A two or more male total sexual experience and/or marriage.

They won't except my blatant no. I even tried to commit suicide to escape this.

If fine with being a selfish fallen angel if im an angel eternally. I'm cool as is. I'm not living to please anyone else. I'm also fine with being a selfish human.

I keep posting about it because I've tried to help myself, I was walking away from these spirits for 10-12 hours of walking around the city but even that much distraction didn't work.

I want to know what they are and how to get rid of them. Maybe a succubus knows how, they're spirits.

>>42005624

Uh yeah they're fucking with you obviously

"Just" become spiritually/intellectually developed enough so that you can get along with them

One possibility is that you don't understand their will and that they are layering delusions in you to try and bend causality toward their will

Step one+two would be to understand ground truth better (all that shit is too dramatic and not real), + understand the spirits and what they want (maybe for you to remember something, or get a job etc or follow some creative vocation, maybe pick up some books and ask them to highlight meaning in the text such that you understand what they mean like casually who they are and what they want to lead you to and so on

idk

Certainly focusing on the health and practical stuff can't go very wrong in the meanwhile either

I am going to put a warning here that looking into this could cause bad things to happen such as tragedy and death.

<https://www.theoutpostforum.com/tof/showthread.php?892-A-Guy-Sees-Dead-Humans-Transformed-Into-Greys-In-The-First-Postmortem-World/page3>

Some of the questions:

For comment 23 in the very first link of the post in the last paragraph of the quote in the blue box:

Why would just writing about that cause something to happen to people and or expose those who read it to the supposed entites? How does that work exactly? Are the supposed entities all knowing and or does writing about / speaking about and or thinking about and or meditating on them attract their attention? Thus causing the supposed entites and death and or tragedy to happen and or follow at all?

What could Daniel Mitchell mean by defining an indeginous presence? Would just merely theorizing cause something such as death and or tragedy to follow / happen and or the supposed entites to attach and or follow someone and or possibly people around them regardless if they know that person or not?

Why would theroizng and or trying to write and or define something be dangerous and possibly cause something to happen at all to the writee and or the person reading?

What kind of issues what he speaking / talking about? How / what kind of problems would writing that blog post cause? Would it be / become dangerous?

How could his original blog have been a transmitter of the supposed entities?

When Daniel Mitchell says that just writing about these issues causes / could causes problems: is he referring to the supposed entities or aliens in general and or both? Or is he referring to different issues entirely? Such as supposed experiences and or both things?

Would theorizing and or doing research/ looking into it purely by oneself cause anything and or death and or tragedy to follow happen at all?

Men have declared spiritual jihad on women and it shows as they slowly begin to lose it. This is it anons, the real gender war has begun, not the fake one with countless pronouns that is being shilled everywhere in the media, but the real war between man and woman.

Don't talk to women, don't help them, don't ask them out, don't have dating apps, don't interact with them. If a woman approaches you be nice and respectful but do not flirt or overtly joke, treat them as an equal man and then leave after the reason for the conversation is over. If a girl comes up to you and flirts kindly turn her down, if she asks you out suddenly say no thank you, don't make up a reason she only has agency because of some external reason not because she likes you. Be vague when talking about your life or weekend plans, anything you do or do with them like hooking up will be picked apart and analyzed by her and her online friends. You are a traitor and not helping anyone if you fall for their tricks.

If men can't display a modicum of power over society, this world and women, then I guess they don't hold much power at all.

At the top of the map, there is a compass rose, a classic symbol of navigation, with the cardinal directions marked. The map is oriented with the Earth's poles at the top, and the equator is marked at the bottom. The map is surrounded by a border that includes a series of small, circular elements that could be interpreted as decorative elements or possibly markers for specific geographical features.

The style of the image is reminiscent of historical maps, possibly from the Renaissance or Baroque periods, given the intricate details and the use of color and pattern. The image is a faithful reproduction of a historical map, with no modern elements or alterations.

Alright guys, sup. NASA/ISS skeptic dude here. I've been like 60 40 globe for some months now. I've been very open to either idea and completely put my bias aside, taking in the facts. I have learned about some wild schizo stuff, and I have learned some interesting and enlightening stuff. I watched flerfs get destroyed by angry triggered globies, and I watched globies drown in their copium denial tears trying to keep their world view alive. I always felt like the truth was somewhere in the middle, so this is what I think after a lot of research on both sides.

I think the Earth is round and is rotating, yes. But I now believe our map is incorrect and that there is more land, maybe a lot, on Earth that the average person does not know about. And I do not think Antarctica is an ice wall for the most part, but there is something strange going on there and it is 100% part of this whole thing. I am convinced of this.

What could be possible is:

There could be a firmament.

Stars might not be as far as they tell us.

The radiation belt is a true threat, which could explain a potential fake moon landing.

Now these are maybes but probably not, so hop off my nuts.

I don't think there is water above us. Maybe at some point there was, and then the water from above was used for the great flood. The Bible could have also been referencing clouds as well.

But yeah, I do believe there is hidden land or even continents we do not know about, including Antarctica. This could include underground cities and stuff, but not to the extent of a hollow Earth. And the reason it would be a secret is because of the implications of what is on those lands, and the elite could benefit from using secret land for resets. But yeah, maybe there are giants or mythical creators on these unknown lands. Dinosaurs. Aliens (doubt it). Who knows. The myths are all there. Valhalla, Tartaria, Atlantis, Agartha, and so on.

Earth is a globe tho guys. Sorry. I respect your opinions.

The image is a collage of various images and text, predominantly featuring images of space and astronomy. The collage is divided into several sections, each containing different elements.

Moving to the top right section, there is a close-up of a spacecraft with a blue and white color scheme, and the text "Spacecraft" is visible.

The bottom left section contains a large, circular image with a red border and a white center, which appears to be a map or a globe. The text around the image is in a language that is not English, and it seems to be discussing the concept of the "Cosmic Sphere."

The bottom section contains a large, circular image with a blue border and a white center, which is labeled "Cosmic Sphere."

The collage also includes several smaller images and text blocks, some of which are not clearly legible due to the resolution and angle of the image. The overall style of the collage is informational and educational, aiming to convey the vastness and complexity of the universe.

When the spinning ball-Earth is finally exposed worldwide for the 400+ year deception it was, Earth's entire population will suddenly be faced with the reality that every government, every space agency, university, secret society, religious organization, mainstream and alternative media outlet have ALL been duplicitous in propping up a monstrous manipulation to fleece and control the masses. The resulting mass mental exodus away from the control system is exactly what humanity needs. Once the flat Earth truth gets out, these lying politicians, spokesmen, reporters and teachers suddenly change from being heralded voices of authority to being ridiculed, shunned and denounced as they deserve. Once the flat Earth truth gets out, these governments, universities, media outlets and other entangled organizations which have long been hard at work weaving this multi-generational ball-Earth myth, suddenly and completely lose all credibility. Once the truth of our flat Earth gets out, so does the truth of these few elite families/societies who have kept this most important and fundamental reality from us for these hundreds of years! Essentially, once the flat Earth truth gets out, so does every other important truth by proxy, because this "mother-of-all-conspiracies" holds under its umbrella literally ALL of the other conspiracies, and exposes them.

Why does it HAVE to be round? Ask yourself why you feel that the round shape and space dogma is necessary for its existence. Why does your mind latch onto that idea? In a vacuum, would you believe it so wholeheartedly? These are important things to consider.

Here's a list of arguments that DESTROY flatties, taken from the previous thread. If anyone needs pictures explaining any of these, I can provide.

>you cannot measure celestial angles on a sphere earth

Any angle to points in the sky mentioned below should be assumed to be measured in the following way which works on both flat and sphere earth: Grab a stone, lift it, drop it, see the line it moved along. Imagine a plane perpendicular to this line. Absolute vertical angles should be measured against that plane. Absolute horizontal angles should be measured against north. Relative angles can be measured anyhow. I will call this plane

PP in the rest of my post.

Two celestial poles: We observe stars rotating around two different points: Polaris in the north and Sigma Octantis in the south. On a flat earth with a dome, there should only be one point of rotation at the top of the dome.

Consistent angular changes: For every 111km you travel north or south, the elevation angle to Polaris (or any star if you move towards or away from it) changes by exactly 1°. This linear relationship only works on a sphere.

Flight paths and distances: Direct flights like Sydney to Santiago (12.5 hours, ~11300km) would require impossible speeds on a flat earth map where the distance would be over 25000km.

No flat earth map: Flatties cannot produce a map with consistent scale that accurately represents all known distances between locations.

Sunset below clouds: During sunset, we can see the sun lighting clouds from underneath which would be impossible if the sun were always above us and just getting farther away.

Equatorial mount/armillary sphere: This ancient astronomical instrument tracks stars by rotating just one axis. It works anywhere on Earth when tilted to match your latitude which is only possible on a sphere.

Constant solar angular speed: The sun moves at exactly 15° per hour across the sky all day. If it were circling above a flat plane and from our POV from and to vanishing points as claimed by flatties, it would appear to slow down near sunrise/sunset and speed up at noon.

Elevation angles and celestial navigation: Celestial navigation using sextants only works because Earth is spherical. The "circles of equal altitude" for stars form actual circles on a globe, but bizarre non-circular shapes on flat earth maps.

Ham radio propagation: Skip zones, gray-line propagation, and Earth-Moon-Earth communications all confirm spherical Earth and a distance of ~384000km to the moon. Radio operators worldwide independently verify these phenomena. Additionally radio signal attenuation at different distances from the transmitter is NOT explainable without a horizon interfering with the signal. The math is not complex, and it can be verified by anyone with inexpensive equipment. No flerf has ever provided alternative formulas that have the same predictive power but assume a flat earth. For example: to double your transmission range, you need to quadruple your power (distance is proportional to the square root of power). But this only holds until you hit the radio horizon. After this point increasing your power somehow doesn't make your signal reach further away like it did before. But increasing the height of your antenna DOES allow your signal to reach further away, and exactly by how much the horizon calculations based on a curved earth predict.

Airplane pitch data: Planes maintain level flight by following Earth's curvature. Even though the plane's absolute orientation in space changes to follow the curve, the average pitch change reads 0° because it's measured against the PP that I mentioned above, which rotates with Earth's curvature if the earth is a globe. So the lack of 'nose down' data is 100% expected on both globe and flat earth models.

Radar/radio horizons: Flatties claim naval weapons "painting" and hitting targets 50km+ away proves flat earth, but they use the wrong horizon. Radio/radar horizon extends 15% further than a visual horizon (Any ham radio operator can confirm this). From a targeting platform at 40m height, you can illuminate targets 55km away if the target is also 40m above sea level (like a building inland). And that is not even taking into account that often the illumination is done by someone else, closer to the target.

Almost all of the angular speed of the moon is because of earth's rotation, not because of the moon orbiting around the earth, but both contribute to the angular speed you see.

Sun's angular speed also a combination of the earth's rotation and the earth orbiting around the sun.

The stars' angular speeds are purely because of the earth's rotation.

>how do you explain sky moving at different speed than the sun

The stars on the sky move at only slightly different angular speed than the Sun. It takes a full year, for the Sun to move around the whole sky, and come back to the same position in relation to the stars. Which is exactly what you'd expect if your vantage point is a platform moving around the Sun once every year.

>and the moon

Well the moon is taking only 28 days to orbit the earth once, so it's moving differently from the stars too.

Anon, why don't you just buy a program like redshift-live, or even just get Redshift 2 by Maris from archive.org and try to run it. It will let you simulate the solar system at any time and date, and then it will let you place yourself on any point of earth (or even on any point of any planet) and watch the sky from that point. Do it for enough points in time and you'll see that the sky you see above your house is exactly correct based on the positions of the sun, earth and moon.

No seriously do you have trouble reading? I never mentioned gravity, I never mentioned a center of gravity. I EXPLICITLY said that the method of measuring angles to stars works on BOTH a flat earth and on a globe. Nothing in my method requires the earth to be a globe or to be flat. It only requires you to be able to drop an object and have it fall for a moment. Unless you deny that if you drop a stone it fall to the ground, then you should have no issue following the steps of my method regardless of whether the earth is flat or a globe.

Too bad for you:

1) Angular speed doesn't require absolute angles to measure, you can literally just look at where the sun is now, point a stick at it, wait three hours, point another stick at the sun, and use a protractor to measure the angle between those two sticks. This works on both flat and globe earth.

2) EVEN IF you needed absolute angles and not relative angles, I already gave you a way to measure angles against the PP plane, which works again on both flat and globe earth.

So in all cases, your moronic argument that using a protractor means the earth is flat, falls completely flat.

Why is the ship flying above the sea? The ship is on the sea, the horizontal line against which the angle is measured is the PP plane I defined in my post >>41969055 which is defined on both a flat earth and on a globe earth, equally easy, by simply letting an object fall down. Doesn't matter if gravity exists either. As long as a rock falls, that is enough to define the PP plane, and to measure angles against it.

How would you know that the clouds are at any point going behind the sun when most of the disk is already so bright that it saturates the sensor of the camera? Here is how to recreate the illusion of something going behind a light source in your own home:

- 1) Get a super bright, disk shaped or spherical, light source and point your camera at it. It must be so bright that all the pixels INSIDE the disk are basically oversaturated (burned out) and should show up as #FFFFFF even if you were to lower the camera saturation quite a bit, while the background around the disk should not look completely black in the camera but should be a little bit illuminated from the light source say something around #555555 for your camera.
- 2) Cover the bottom 1/3 of your view with something opaque enough that it drops the value of the source from #FFFFFF to something darker, say, #888888.
- 3) Cover the middle 1/3 of the view with something that is transparent enough to lower the brightness of the light source to the visible eye, but not opaque enough to lower it so much that the pixels become normally saturated, so the camera still reads them as #FFFFFF.

Well now the top 1/3 of the disk source and the middle 1/3 will look exactly the same in camera, while the bottom 1/3 will look darker even in camera. At the same time the top 1/3 OUTSIDE the disk will look as bright as before you added any filters, while the middle 1/3 OUTSIDE the disk will look DARKER than the top 1/3. This will create the illusion that the middle 1/3 filter is actually going BEHIND the light source, since its effect is visible on the left and on the right of the light source but not INSIDE the light source, because despite it having an actual effect even inside the disk, the saturation of the camera does not allow you to distinguish the effect as everything there still reads #FFFFFF because of how oversaturated it was in the beginning.

So if flat earth is true, wouldn't that mean that Stellarium is actually using flat earth models inside it to predict the position of everything in the sky with accuracy? If that's the case, why not inspect the code of Stellarium and show to people that it's using a flat earth model? It's an open source program so they cannot hide anything, you can compile the code yourself and see if it still makes the same predictions as the released version.

After 24 hours, my three posts (>>41969055 >>41969057 >>41969058) that contain at least 11 points against FE and/or against common arguments of flat-earthiers, have still received no actual reply.

The only replies I received either misrepresent what I said, like assuming any of my arguments require gravity or a gravitational center to be real (which they don't require at all), or they completely miss the fact that angular speed is not the same as speed. Or they miss the fact that angular speed does not require absolute angle measurement as merely relative angle measurement is enough to calculate angular speed: simply pointing straws at things in the sky and then using a protractor between those straws is enough to measure angular changes, and combined with a stopwatch you can measure angular speed.

I was also accused of committing a fallacy, specifically that I assumed that if $P \Rightarrow Q$ then $Q \Rightarrow P$, but when I asked which statements from my posts do Q and P refer to, I got no explanation.

I also received the expected, plug-your-ears-and-shout-la-la-la answers of simply dismissing all my points as "non arguments" as "there is no argument to be had because we have elevation angles", even though I never mentioned "elevation angles". I described a specific angle measurement methodology that works both on a flat earth and on a globe earth. If you believe my angles are actually the same as elevation angles, and you believe it is impossible to measure elevation angles on a globe then I challenge you to explain which step of my method for measuring my angles does not work on a globe earth. Go through the steps of my process, tell me which step would not work on a globe.

- Panel 1: "90 N"
- Panel 2: "Equator"
- Panel 3: "June Solstice"

Each panel shows the positions of the Sun, Moon, and Equator at different times of the day. The Sun is depicted as a bright circle at the top left corner, the Moon as a smaller circle at the top right corner, and the Equator as a straight line connecting the two.

In Panel 1, the Sun is at 8:00 am, the Moon is at 6:00 pm, and the Equator is at 12:00 pm.

In Panel 2, the Sun is at 6:00 pm, the Moon is at 12:00 pm, and the Equator is at 12:00 pm.

In Panel 3, the Sun is at 12:00 pm, the Moon is at 6:00 pm, and the Equator is at 12:00 pm.

The positions of the Sun, Moon, and Equator are marked with arrows, indicating the direction of the Sun's movement relative to the Earth's rotation. The positions of the Sun, Moon, and Equator are also marked with numbers, which likely represent the degrees of latitude and longitude.

The text "90 N" and "Equator" are located at the top of each panel, likely indicating the latitude and longitude of the location depicted. The text "Jume Solstice" and "Jume Solstice" are located at the bottom of each panel, likely indicating the dates of the solstices.

The image is a scientific representation, likely used in a scientific or educational context to illustrate the positions of the Sun, Moon, and Equator relative to the Earth's surface at different times of the day.

But as you correctly pointed out, the problem here is the constant speed throughout the day, whether 15 or 13 degrees per hour, and why that speed does not greatly change near the supposed vanishing points at dawn and sunset.

The Earth rotates from West to East and one rotation takes 23 hours and 56 minutes. This causes all celestial objects to rotate from East to West from our point of view.

But after one rotation the Earth will also have orbited the Sun by 0.98° (average value) which will cause the Sun to have moved 0.98° along the Ecliptic in an Eastern direction since we orbit the Sun in an anti-clockwise direction (if we look down on the north pole).

The Moon orbits the Earth from West to East so when the Earth has rotated one revolution the stars will have returned to their previous location but the Moon will have moved 13.14° (average value) along its path in an Eastern direction. This path is almost along the Ecliptic but not quite. The Moon's orbit is tilted by around 5° in relation the Ecliptic.

Theoretically if the Moon's orbital period was shorter than Earth's rotational period we would see the Moon rise in the West and set in the East. This happens on Mars with its moon Phobos which has an orbital period of just under 8 hours.

The two satellites were NOSS 3-7 (A) and NOSS 3-7 (B) which were launched together and have a similar orbit.

This is all the information Stellarium uses to predict where those two satellites are in the sky from a given location on Earth:

NOSS 3-7 (A)

1 40964U 15058A 26045.86285667 0.00000000 00000-0 00000-0 0 00

NOSS 3-7 (R)

2 40981 63.4348 25.8848 0205668 358.5676 1.4324 13.40995022 03

These lines of numbers just describe the shape and orientation of the orbit and nothing more and Stellarium is able to use that small amount of information to predict where a satellite is. How? By assuming that the Earth is a sphere and that orbital mechanics works.

The Earth is depicted with a grid-like pattern, which is a common representation of Earth's surface. The Earth's surface is illuminated by artificial lights, which are likely to be city lights, suggesting that the image is taken during the night.

In the upper part of the image, there are three bright celestial bodies. These are likely stars, as they are the brightest and most prominent features in the image. The stars are positioned in a triangular formation, with one star at the top, one in the middle, and one at the bottom.

The background of the image is a dark, starry sky. The sky is filled with stars and a few small, bright objects that could be galaxies or other celestial bodies. The sky is dotted with lines that represent constellations, and there are also some green lines that could be interpreted as lines of communication or communication signals.

The image is a digital rendering, and the colors are realistic, with the Earth's surface in a dark brown tone, the sky in a deep black, and the stars in a bright white or light gray.

The image does not contain any text or logos. The style of the image is realistic and appears to be a digital visualization, possibly for educational or scientific purposes.

This is all well and good, but what's BEYOND this place? I'd assume that surely there's an infinite cosmos beyond this little closed system. Yeah, summerland sounds peachy keen, but I don't feel like chillin in Saturn's limited little "heaven" for all eternity. I want to explore the cosmos, travel to other realms, and acquire cool anime powers.

And just to drive my point home for anyone still doubting that you are clueless:

The equatorial mount works, whether I measure the radius of the earth or not.

Moonbounce radio propagation takes ~3 seconds for the roundtrip whether I measure the radius of the earth or not.

The radio horizon works as modeled by known formulas, whether I measure the radius of the earth or not.

Star angles will go up 1 degree if you view them from a place on the earth 111km towards the stars direction, whether I measure the radius of the earth or not.

Those are just 4 of the at least 11 points I made, not having to do anything with the challenge you issues.

So, to summarize, you're full of shit, you answer to none of the arguments, you throw false accusations about me "assuming if $P \Rightarrow Q$ then $Q \Rightarrow P$ " without EVER answering to me what's my P and what's my Q, and when pressed on your bullshit you issue a challenge that has nothing to do with my arguments, and which obviously only aims to buy you time now that you are exposed as a clueless fraud.

The image is a composite of two separate photographs. The top photograph shows a black metal sundial with a curved top and a flat bottom, set against a backdrop of a garden with yellow flowers and green foliage. The sundial is positioned on a pedestal, and the top of the sundial is adorned with a circular pattern that appears to be a sun or moon. The bottom of the sundial has a scale indicating degrees, minutes, and seconds, with the numbers 0 to 360 degrees and 0 to 60 minutes marked. The sundial is mounted on a black pole with a metal bracket, and there is a small label on the bottom of the sundial that reads "SUN-TUNNEL."

And this is the reason why an equatorial sundial that is properly aligned with the celestial poles show that the shadow cast by the gnomon moves at a constant rate of 15° per hour.

On either the north or south pole you can create a simple sundial by just sticking a vertical pole into the snow and the shadow will move at a constant rate no matter the season (unless it's polar night of course). So when you align a sundial with the celestial poles you are orienting it the same way as if it was placed vertically on the geographic poles.

Flattards claim that sundials can only work on a flat earth but I have never come across one that was able to show how this sundial can work on their pizza model and I have zero hope that any of you will be able to either.

The sundial works everywhere on Earth. All you have to do is point the gnomon towards either pole and rotate the sundial around the gnomon to set the time zone (optional).

My list of arguments like I said:

>list of arguments that DESTROY flatties is intended to show that flat earth does not work with these things, how can an equatorial mount which was designed assuming the stars are points on a spherical dome around earth, and that go under the horizon for half the day, work on a flat earth?

An equatorial mount DISPROVES the flat earth, rather than PROVES the spherical earth. BUT a spherical earth is the simplest explanation for why it works. If you flatties have another explanation to explain how a machine with the stars on a literal sphere mimics perfectly the positions of starts above a flat earth then show your explanation. Till you show it you got nothing, the simplest explanation remains earth being a globe, and being flat with a dome above it simply doesn't work because vanishing points would destroy the perspective of constellations by tilting them, which as shown by this guy here >>41971326 does not happen. Explain how all these work on your model.

>If earths a sphere the stars will be measured this degree from this distance

First, I note that you do not deny that the equatorial mount (I assume we mean the armillary sphere here) DOES work on a spherical earth. That is indeed not proof that the earth is spherical, but it's safe to assume so until someone comes with another model that fits. You claim a flat earth would also fit. Great. How about you make a diagram that shows on a flat earth, how the equatorial mount works? Show the flat earth, place the mount on four random locations (Pick four random villages across Europe, east Asia, north and south America), and explain how the armillary sphere works. Specifically explain where the stars are on the dome above the flat earth for them to be able to be predicted by the sphere they are imprinted on inside the instrument and how the perspective of constellations never really changes (you never see a flattened out Orion for example). Just show a 3d diagram please, all your flatties have conferences and spend money on shit like that but cannot spend money on hiring someone who knows how to operate geogebra to make this animations for you? You never showed jack shit about this. You keep insisting that all I am trying to prove is that the earth is a globe beyond any doubt when I explicitly started my list of 11 points by saying those destroy the flat earth model. Do you know what I meant? That they prove that the earth cannot be flat. For example the armillary sphere is constructed assuming that the stars are actually going below the horizon (you can see how much below they are), and it assumes that the stars are visually on a sphere, with two rotational poles, and the location of the poles depends exactly on your latitude on a sphere earth. If the earth is flat, then how the hell can this machine work? But it does work, (like Stellarium does too) so the earth cannot be flat. Does it need to be a globe? Imagine a plane perpendicular to this line. Absolute vertical angles should be measured against that plane. Absolute horizontal angles should be measured against north. Relative angles can be measured anyhow. I will call this plane PP in the rest of my post.

Stop attempting to redefine axioms

Your fallacies are not deductive reasoning they are fallacies

If you're talking about falling objects you have established a vertical, you haven't established a zenith/vertical towards the center of a sphere, that would be presumptuous. You know, the very sphere you're trying to prove. Vertical or zenith or plumb is in respect to a flat plane, those don't work on spheres either

The theory I heard about this was, it started as a kind of joke and if you could argue the earth was flat then you could argue about anything and sharpen your debating skills. Then in internet got hold of it and it snowballed from there. The 2 main things I think about this is, what the fuck does anyone gain from lying about the world being flat? and Who gives a fuck? As long as all the maths, physics and other shit that would make a difference are true, does it even matter? Some guys dedicate their lives to this, which I guess keep some of the nutters busy but at the end of the day can you feed yourself and sleep well at night? If it did come out the world was flat, it probably wouldn't effect my life in the slightest. I'd still have shit to do.

No idea really on flat earth, does it really matter either way to any of us?

One thing is weird though, I used to work for a tunneling contractor. We were doing a tunnel in Austin 4 miles long. The city surveyor came and told us we would not hole though the next shaft correctly because we were way off track and needed to correct.

Our surveyor told them to fuck off. They were using a curved coordinate system with the earth's curvature built in. We are using a flat grid. They said we would be 4' off or so in each direction, we came in 0.02" off or something, basically perfect. This surveyor dude built the CERN tunnel in California, he knew his shit. The tunnel was guided by laser system all the way to the home point and guide the TBM with zero fucks given to the supposed curvature of the earth.

>A flat measurement of earth means earths flat

>We measure earth flat therefore it's flat

These two sentences are intentionally vague and I've seen your flatties FLIP on their meaning at least once in the last thread. Sometimes you say it and you mean that you measured something and that measurement when interpreted brings you to the conclusion that the earth is flat. Other times you say it and you mean that you first assume the earth is flat just to be able to START measuring something. As I already said, stop talking like retarded oracles, be precise in what you mean and explain yourselves.

>If P then Q P therefore Q

My 11 points aim to show that the earth is not flat, I do not aim to show that it's a globe (although it is but that's neither my P nor my Q and you have not shown so by quoting my ACTUAL text, you keep quoting your interpretations of my text which are literally different text that came out of your mind. You love attacking strawmen).

>None of your fallacies have debunked the earth being flat.

You can keep repeating this without actually arguing against them, they will continue proving your theory wrong until you actually have an answer to them.

>I don't care about flat earth models

This sums up pretty well the denial on your side: Refusing to even SHOW how simple geometry works on a flat earth.

>I don't care how many map projections you want to falsify in some autistic way

>You don't have measurements of earth curve.

Every 111km you move north happen to raise Polaris by 1 degree without changing the perspective of constellations. That's literally a measurement of curvature. And it's the same EVERYWHERE on earth where polaris is visible. In the south of the equator every 111km you move south raise Sigma Octantis be the same 1 degree, again this happens EVERYWHERE on earth. This is literally a measurement of the curvature of the ground. If you don't believe so, please show HOW this phenomenon can happen on any model of the earth OTHER than a globe. Again, not my intention to prove the globe, but since you mentioned it, go ahead. I'm waiting for the model.

>You cannot measure angles to curves, this has been told to you multiple times already. Stop attempting to redefine axioms

1) You can measure angles to tangents of curves.

2) I am not even doing the above, I gave you a SPECIFIC, DETAILED step-by-step method on how to measure what you keep calling "elevation angles" which involves NO CURVES. I've asked a million times, you've completely evaded the question EVERY SINGLE TIME: What step of my method is impossible to do on a globe earth?

>You fallacies are not deductive reasoning they are fallacies

You keep making accusations without any basis. Most of them are deductive reasoning proving the earth cannot be flat (if they show it's a globe that's an extra, I even don't care about it I just want you to show me how they do not disprove flat earth with 100% certainty). If you think they are wrong, all you need to show is how these things can happen on a flat earth.

>you haven't established a zenith/vertical towards the center of a sphere,

1) Zenith is simply the point in the sky where the upper side of the vertical line we defined vanishes to.

2) Whether the bottom of this line crosses the center of the sphere seems irrelevant to the 11 points I made. My method is used to measure the angle to stars. Whether it passes through the center of the sphere or not is irrelevant, you CAN measure an angle, and my arguments should be read as if THAT is the angle to any point in the sky.

>that would be presumptuous. You know, the very sphere you're trying to prove.

How would you have felt yesterday evening if you hadn't eaten breakfast or lunch? Do hypotheticals trouble you? Let me explain again like you're 4 years old:

I gave you a method that doesn't make assumptions about the shape of the earth and allows you to make measurements of the angles of stars. Now, in square brackets I will put the hypothetical part of the sentence. A hypothetical doesn't need to be true. I am not claiming it is true, I am just saying "if it is true then something else happens". Let's go:

1) [If the earth is flat], then the vertical line we defined by dropping a rock is a perpendicular to the surface of the planet, so the PP plane I was talking about is parallel to the ground everywhere, and we can measure elevation angles towards it.

2) [If the earth is a globe and the objects fall towards the center of that globe], then the vertical line is indeed passing through the center of the globe, the PP plane can be used to measure angles to stars.

3) [If the earth is a globe and the objects do not necessarily fall towards the center of that globe], then, like before, we can still define a PP plane and measure angles to stars against that one as well, just like in the previous case.

See? No presumption about anything, those are hypotheticals. My method for angle measurement works on all three cases.

>They all come from Astronomy and Astrophysics who took Eratosthenes measurements of shadow elevation angles.

True but since then we've made way more accurate tools to measure the same angles, and not just from two places like Eratosthenes did but literally from every place on the planet: Stellarium can somehow predict the exact angles to everything in the sky above your house and above my house, at the same time, no-matter where we live on the planet, and it does so assuming the earth is a globe. When will you make a program that can do the same using a flat earth model and a dome of stars near the earth or whatever you people believe (it's not like you've taken ANY position on the exact location of stars or the moon or the sun, you keep avoiding showing an actual model that agrees with any observations).

Additionally they model your latitude and longitude as a position on said globe earth, and use them to predict which part of the "celestial sphere" will be visible to you exactly at any point in time from any place in earth.

I can't wait for flatties to finally create software that has the same ability to predict reality while using their non-existent flat earth model that they REFUSE to even show because the moment they show any model, it's obvious it cannot explain half of the things I listed here: >>41969055 >>41969057 >>41969058

My theory about the demographics of flat earthers is this:

Very few of them are mid to high IQ grifters. Those just collect their Patreon, sell their books, etc.

A tiny tiny portion is just schizos.

The bulk of them is low IQ to the point where they simply cannot model things in their head. You've met such people: You talk to them for anything even remotely complex in the world and you realize that their brain has no internal model of the world. Their thoughts are basically whims based on a set of random phrases and factoids they remember. There's no integration of information going on in there. You won't see most of these other than in the occasional single sentence comment under a video. This type of person explains the popularity of low quality videos and images in FE circles: literal slop slideshows and collages made in pbrush.exe. Meanwhile GE gets random anon making 3Blue1Brown-quality stuff like >>41979448 and >>41974935 just to make an argument in fucking 4chan.

The final portion of them are midwits. Those are the ones you see here trying to argue. They likely had the globe model in their head until some point in their life, then they got in a rabbit hole of lies and they gave up on that model. They still don't have a comprehensive and consistent flat earth model in their mind yet, which is why you will never see any of them posting any actual graphics showing how the whole thing works. They currently think that they will eventually work it out as they complete their journey of learning. The end result for them is either that they will eventually realize that they are still not getting closer to a consistent model in their heads and silently leave the cult, or they if they enjoy the sense of superiority that denial can give them will continue their half-assed arguments forever, falling deeper and deeper into games about semantics, and avoiding making actual arguments by choosing to engage in meta-argumentation instead.

I don't know what YOU mean by elevation angles, nor are they required for my argument to stand. My method works on both flat earth and globe. If it doesn't show me which step is impossible to follow. Measure the angles using my method with the PP plane. Then explain how in a flat earth we can get the 1degree/111km fixed ratio. Go on, explain it. Yes. But I didn't ask for you to make multiple map projections, you said:

>I don't care how many map projections

So I don't understand what you think I asked you to do. If the earth is flat, you don't really have many ways to project it on a map that would serve any value. Just scale the thing down and draw it on a paper, simple. Why do you bring up projections like I asked you to do some higher math to show me your model? Dude if your "flat" earth model is so fucking complex that it needs and can be projected in multiple ways, you might as well be a globe earther. I will laugh so hard if you retards end up showing us a spherical projection of the flat earth to explain the observations.

Oh, so you don't have a map of the flat earth. I guess then 1 of my 11 points was correct after all.

>Because you want to falsify it and pretend that falsification of a model means the earths not flat it's a ball.

No you stupid fag. If your model doesn't satisfy all the observations (and thank you for admitting that at last) that is, if your model is falsifiable, then all this proves is that this specific model isn't representative of reality. Now if you fail to provide ANY flat model that is not falsifiable, then yeah who the fuck are you to come here and claim you know the earth is flat? Meanwhile, a sphere model explains all the 11 points I mentioned, if you disagree, show me how it doesn't. Now that you admitted that a flat earth model cannot satisfy all observations we can finally move on seeing you disprove the globe earth model.

And stop repeating "elevation angles don't exist on spheres". My points DO NOT RELY ON ELEVATION ANGLES. I gave a specific way for how to measure angles, USE THAT METHOD FOR MY POINTS AND THE POINTS STAND. It's that simple.

>We have actually reality on our side which are measurements of earth

If reality agrees with your theory, then a model of reality should be possible to create that agrees with the theory. In fact ALL we can prove in science is that the model agrees with observations. You NEVER prove what reality is like at 100% certainty. All you can do is say "here's a model, you can use it to make predictions about how things will behave in reality" and then we discuss if there are observations that disagree with what the model predicts should be possible. You just said you have no model of flat earth because of all the problems of the "AE map". You have not shown any other model that can explain observations.

The image is a screenshot from a video game, featuring a character with a pink and white color scheme. The character has a large, round head with a pinkish-red mohawk and green eyes. It has a small, round body with a white belly and a pinkish-red tail. The character is standing on a grassy area with yellow and orange patterns in the background.

In the top left corner of the image, there is a blue rectangular frame with a white border. Inside this frame, there is a small, square image of the character. The text within the blue frame reads, "I'll register you as a retard!" in white capital letters. The style of the image is reminiscent of a pixelated or retro-style game interface, with a focus on the character and the text within the blue frame.

1) I gave you the PP plane. You just refuse to tell me how the PP plane cannot be defined on a globe when my method does not rely on the ground being flat, it relies on stones falling.

>You don't get to presume that light travels to earth in parallel rays before you can then begin to take angle measurements

Go ahead and try to correct me on what natural law means you fucking little chickenshit
A natural law is just a mathematical relationship that describes consistent patterns in nature. What you are completely missing is the law as written down on a textbook is not a FULL description of nature or even a full description of a single phenomenon.

For example Snell's law is a simplified case for discrete boundaries, but the law does not imply that refraction happens ONLY on discrete boundaries.

By the same token, the Newton's laws of motion can be used to tell you how much an object is moving when you apply a constant force to it. Claiming that we cannot apply calculus on Snell's law to use it for gradients of refractive index, is the same as claiming we cannot use calculus to figure out the position of an object when the force applied to is variable (either in relation to time (as would be in the case of a rocket that is ramping up/down its output) or in relation to distance traveled (as would be the case with a spring)).

Calculus is just maths. It's not a NEW law if you use calculus on it, just like it's not a NEW law if you use algebra to transform the textbook version of Snell's law into $\theta_1 = \arcsin[(n_2/n_1)\sin(\theta_2)]$ or any other form. It's still the same law, that's the whole point of mathematical tools like algebra and calculus.

And we KNOW there's a gradient of refractive indexes in the atmosphere because we can measure the gradient of pressure above the ground by simply moving a barometer vertically, and we do the same for humidity and temperature, and then we replicate these conditions in a lab and we can measure the change in the refractive index. It's really that simple.

Anonymous Thu 19 Feb 2026 05:40:35 No.41993750 Report

So, to summarize, you CAN use calculus on Snell's law, same way we successfully use calculus to extend the equations of motion and Newton's laws to predict how an object will move under continuously changing force and mass (in the case of rockets losing fuel mass while moving). And we CAN demonstrate there's a changing gradient of refractive indexes above the ground. So we CAN predict the refraction.

You are simply not literate enough to understand the method.

>I don't give a shit if you falsified the AE map, it's just lazy fucking guesswork that globetards want to engage with.

The AE map is USED by a ton of your ilk's videos on youtube. Now you are ADMITTING that this map does not agree with real observations. Cool, I love this. Now you have two logical options: either you show us ANOTHER flat map which is actually correct and jives with observations like the 1 degree/111 km and the time it takes for planes to fly from South Africa to Australia etc (see my 11 points again for what you need to be able to explain with your new map), OR you can admit you don't have such a map, and then everyone can finally start looking into problems with a globe earth and we can start debunking the supposed discrepancies in the globe earth model (I've already started debunking a few, see my point about the pitch data from airplanes now showing them nosing down).

The globe model is not a map, it's a 3D model that explains: 1) Why stars rotate around two different poles. 2) Why the 1degree/111km relationship exists. 3) Why flights from Australia to Santiago take 12.5 hours. 4) Can predict eclipses centuries in advance. 5) Jives with all my 11 points that you have no model to explain. The figure is depicted with long, wavy hair and a beard, and is wearing a blue garment with a gold trim. The figure's expression is serious, and he is holding a small, round object in his right hand, which could be interpreted as a crystal ball or a similar object. The background is dark, which contrasts with the figure and the objects he is holding, making them stand out. The painting has a realistic style with attention to detail, and the colors are rich and warm, contributing to the overall mood of the piece. There are no visible texts on the image.

Oh yeah who am I to imply that calculus is maths and that it can be used on mathematical formulas. Truly preposterous. I like how you COMPLETELY avoided talking about how without calculus you cannot even figure out the position of a rocket as its mass is changing, something that the textbook form of the "laws" that govern motion don't directly allow unless you apply calculus. By your reasoning it's a miracle ANYTHING works, given how often we extend simple relationships that we measure under controlled condition (like refraction between two distinct materials) to complex cases like https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Graded-index_fiber that somehow works as expected, an example which you ALSO very conveniently ignored just to spew even more vague nonsense.

This is retarded, there is no category error: Asking for a model for a theory about the shape of the earth and the relative location of celestial bodies is something completely standard and expected in a "discussion" like ours. If you think you can exempt yourself from providing a working model, then you are bringing nothing of value to the table. You literally have nothing to provide here to anyone, but your delusions.

Show the 1/111 relationship on your model, or continue talking vaguely about your delusions and refusing explicitly now to provide a working model and putting yourself outside of the realm of argumentation. I'm happy with both choices: the first gives me something interesting to work with, the second reveals how retarded you are. Win-win for me.

>You don't know what theory means while pretending you do. Or else you wouldn't keep repeating this horseshit. You simply refuse to learn what theory means on purpose, you just plug your ears and go lalalalala

Keep playing word games with your theory. Measurements are things like Polaris is at 40 degrees angle using this method (e.g. my method). Theories explain WHY those measurements have those values. They model the world and make predictions that should match measurements. Flat earth is supposed to be a theory that would explain these measurements, but you've already admitted you will not be showing how it can do so, nor do you care about showing any model that would be able to do so. Because there is no model. At this point, there is no theory, your "theory" is just a few assertions here and there that predict nothing. You were trying to raise flat earth above the theory status, but in reality with your admissions about not caring that there is no working model, you've lowered it to assertion status. You're doing more to destroy your position than I do at this point. I wonder if you are actually a globe earther troll, just evading arguments left and right and claiming models are irrelevant (category errors) on purpose to subvert the flat earth side.

I'll repeat myself because you only replied with evasion and insults to it

The image is a three-panel comic strip with a satirical tone. In the first panel, a man with glasses and a beard is shown wearing a red and black striped shirt. He is smiling and appears to be in a relaxed state. The second panel shows the same man with a hand on his head, appearing to be in pain or distress. The third panel shows the same man with a hand on his head, but this time, the hand is pointing towards a large, muscular arm with a tattoo on it. The arm is shown in a pose that suggests it is flexing or straining. In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a question mark, and the text "Where is your model?" is written in a casual, informal font. The style of the comic strip is cartoonish and exaggerated, with exaggerated facial expressions and body language. The colors used are bright and bold, with a mix of red, black, and white. The overall tone of the comic strip is humorous and satirical, as it humorously questions the model's location.

Like human beings, Earth has a electromagnetic torsion field and a traumatized ego-mind (ego=geo, the globe, mind like the frontal lobe).

The atmosphere (Atum's sphere) has an ionosphere, toposphere, stratosphere and ozone layer (allotrope of oxygen). Lightning strikes cause the Schumann resonance.

The crust (cursed) of the earth consists of a half of rock like basalt (cooled down lava), diabase, gabbro, granite, zinc and half of oxides (compounds containing oxygen), quartz (crystalline mineral of silicon-oxygen), corundum (aluminium oxyde), iron, calcium oxide (alkaline crystalline solid), sodium oxide, potassium oxide, magnesium oxide, titanium dioxide, chloride, neodymium, chromium, zircon (zirconium),.. Volcano's on the edge of tectonic plates eject liquid rock.

It spins around its axis, creating the day and night cycle. It has a wobble of 23 degrees in its axis (angle between celestial equator and ecliptic), causing the precession of the equinoxes.

The Saturn cult developed a takeover strategy in 3 steps. The Dracio-Orion Empire (Aryan druids) dominated the first global Atlantis civilization as priests and genetic engineers with knowledge of quartz crystal (crystal ball as symbol of world control). Human DNA was modified to have a more obedient slave/pet mentality.

Earth is an ark: human life (different races=hue's= hue-man) was seeded on earth by extraterrestrial races (Pleiadians, etc..). Reptilians breded dinosaurs while humans created mammal life. The universe and Earth is a matrix, a womb for (re)birth and growth of the human soul. The sun affects the magnetic field of earth through the solar wind (visible in the aurora borealis).

That's a great way to avoid arguments that destroy your theory. I'm not sure if this is the best way or just refusing to present your "theory" by not calling it a theory. You are not the master of evasion you think you are. You are evading a lot, but you are not good at hiding it, it's obvious you are avoiding to engage in any argumentation.

>Flat earth is the prerequisite for drawing angles to moron, already told you

Yes you told me but you never explained how my method doesn't work since my method doesn't require the earth to be flat. You keep avoiding that and your only retort was "I don't care about your method" and "it's not compelling methodology" lol. What a lame reply, you're shitting your pants and don't have an answer so you are just ignoring things you don't like.

>Model is non sequitur category error,

You cannot explain any of my 11 points so you invented this desperate cope. Name ONE other field where models are a "category error". Physics? Chemistry? Engineering? You're evading engagement by making up bullshit excuses because you have nothing. Even all the other flatties use the AE map as a model and try to draw things on it or on top of it to explain stuff until it get BTFOed, but your "innovation" is that you are in denial before the conversation even starts by claiming "muh category error" without stating any basis for it.

>And it isn't a theory

Cool, so it's just your personal delusion then since there's no predictive power in anything you say.

>I never claimed a dome

Perfect. So are you saying that there is no dome or that you don't know if there is a dome? Since you NEVER show your model we all have to assume what's in your vacant cranium at any time, so we'll take guesses using common FE beliefs. We're all ears for your actual hypothesis about how we see stars where we see them. But you won't post it, cause you don't have one, loser.

>Dual rotations of the stars would be an affirming the consequent fallacy for the globe

1) I am not trying to "prove" the globe at a 100% level. I am claiming that there can be no flat earth that has twin rotations that explains star observations. If you disagree, show the model you useless piece of shit with the dual rotation above the flat plane of the earth.

2) You probably don't know this, but science works by primarily by inductive reasoning. No model of nature is ever 100% PROVEN, this isn't mathematics. You observe phenomena, you form a hypothesis (a model) that could explain them. You test predictions of that model. You refine the model or replace it until you have one that agrees with all the observations you make. Then when the hypothesis has survived many attempts of falsification it is considered a theory. So yeah you are technically right at something: flat earth is not a theory, it's still at best a hypothesis, but we call it "theory" because many flatties believe it has graduated from hypothesis to theory and that's what THEY call it. YOU refuse to call it anything, because you think doing so elevates it to "reality" while in actuality it downgrades it to a "personal delusion". In any case my point is that your whole accusation of us trying to DEDUCE that the earth is a sphere, is incorrect. We are NOT making DEDUCTIVE reasoning in science therefore no-one is (or should be) affirming the consequent. We give you observations that flat earth theory predicts would be impossible, therefore flat earth is falsified. The same observations ARE predicted by globe earth, therefore globe earth remains consistent with observations. We never have 100% proof of anything based on it agreeing with observations, so cut this "affirming the consequent" crap, this is not how science works. It's just that you faggots have never shown any observation that falsifies a globe earth and have never explained how the things WE show you agree with a flat earth.

I never said it is, why are you even bringing this up? I explained to you what the refractive index is, bitch. And I told you that we've observed that if light passes through areas of material with different phase velocities, it refracts. We've observed this both when the phase velocity changes abruptly (at a border) AND when it changes gradually (in certain types of transparent materials). We've given links to both lenses that rely on this gradient change of phase velocity (and of the refractive index) and links to optic fibers that rely on the same. So fuck off with your evasion.

(picrel) Same reason the sky is blue. The blue parts of the white sunlight have already been scattered when the sunlight first enters the atmosphere, which is what makes the sky blue when the sun is relatively above you, meanwhile when you are FAR from the sun, the light has to pass through a lot of atmosphere to reach you so all the blue light has been scattered around already and what reaches you is mostly the red part of the light. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Rayleigh_scattering

The image is a collection of three separate illustrations, each depicting a different scenario related to the concept of the "Flat Earth" or "Big Bang" theory.

In the top left, there is a cartoon-style illustration of a celestial body with a sun at the center, surrounded by a ring of stars. The sun is depicted with a blue-green hue, and the surrounding stars are white, suggesting a nebula or a cloud of gas and dust.

The top right illustration shows a close-up of a person's face, with a beard and glasses, looking directly at the viewer. The person appears to be in a neutral or slightly frowning expression, with a slight smile on the lips.

The bottom illustration is a black and white depiction of a solar system. It features the planets in their orbits around the sun, with the sun at the center, surrounded by the planets. The planets are labeled with their names, such as "Mercury," "Venus," "Earth," "Mars," "Jupiter," "Saturn," "Uranus," "Neptune," "Pluto," and "Neptune."

In the center of the image, there is a text bubble that reads "Yeah right, I don't believe that faked up nonsense." This text is in a bold, capitalized font and is colored in white, contrasting with the black background of the image.

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, using visual elements to convey a disbelief or disbelief in the "Flat Earth" or "Big Bang" theory.

Irrelevant. Bring me the replacement for Newton's law, it also doesn't support a gradually changing mass either, so calculus is still needed to apply it to anything more complex tha the simplest of cases. I don't understand how points fly over your head like this.

>I already asked you to show me the theory I'm presenting. You can't because you're a little faggot

I can't because you don't even have a theory. It's hilarious that you think that refusing to provide a model strengthens your position.

>[I] Never once presented a theory

Yeah no shit, lol. I'll keep this and quote it anytime I see you trying to argue again. We were doing you a favor and giving you the benefit of the doubt by elevating your delusion to a theory, and you just slapped our kindness away as if that makes your arguments stronger. Let me make this easier for you kid. Let's say you have a measurement between two points that shows the ground is flat (no measurement does that but let's assume it does). There are now two possible theories: My theory is that the ground between those two places is flat because someone turned it flat using machinery. Your theory is that the ground is actually naturally flat. Both theories agree with the measurement. So now we need to make other measurements to figure out which theory can be falsified. If we go and find tracks of heavy machinery, that falsifies your theory, because the ground you've been measuring wasn't natural after all, but it doesn't falsify my theory about flattening the ground. So a measurement by itself doesn't mean jack shit, it doesn't predict anything, it is merely a measurement. There is no instruments that measures something and comes up with two values: "flat earth" or "not flat earth". You don't "measure the earth" and it automatically comes out flat. This bullshit exists only in your head, because you are incapable of forming a working theory to describe whatever you think the earth's shape is. You STILL have not shown how any of my 11 points work on a flat earth, so fuck off, you know nothing at all, and you cannot help anyone here. You have nothing to offer beyond your personal delusions which don't stand up to scrutiny, regardless of what you want to call them.

>This only shows you don't know what either 2 words means.

And your evasions about how you don't even have to show a model are so funny to watch. Like this is peak level retardation, I don't think I can find this anywhere else in 4chan.

>You also don't understand refraction

>Source: my ass

>You never once presented proof for Refraction just a sharpshooter fallacy

You keep thinking that science requires 100% proof for theories to be accepted. There's never 100% proof. We showed you complex technologies that REQUIRE refraction on gradient changes of the refraction index (or in other words a gradient change of the phase velocity of light) in order to WORK. We use calculus to predict how those optic fibers and lenses will work, and the predictions come out true. 1) the calculus expanded snell's law is still snell's law. Same way that if you use algebra to solve snell's law for another variable, it's still snell's law, same way if you use calculus it's still snell's law. You can deny this all you want, but you have no basis for the denial, neither theoretical basis, nor practical examples where applying calculus breaks the truthness of something, and the tech working is further evidence that you are wrong, so eat a bag of dicks, your opinion is irrelevant when the tech works and the predictions work. Literally nobody cares what you think is wrong or not if it works and predicts reality. You're delusional and we don't give a fuck about your delusions.

If you think any flat earther is happy with turning what they think is a theory, into your personal delusion, you are wrong. You are literally not part of the discussion. What doesn't make sense to you doesn't make sense because you don't know the human incentives behind the flight paths. What doesn't make sense on a flat earth map doesn't make sense because those flights require speeds way above what those airplanes doing them support. Your problem is hard to understand without speaking with people, the problem I'm showing would imply typical passenger airplanes lie about their max speed specs, and going supersonic daily, on predictable paths, without anyone having recorded it.

First of all that's not a direct measurement of earth's shape. You don't measure someone's liver function by checking how yellow they are, you do blood tests.

Do you have any reason to believe that even if you see a land beyond the predicted typical horizon, it cannot be because of refraction?

If it helps you answer:

- We observe light refract any time the phase velocity of light in the medium it is in changes. We define refractive index to be c divided by the phase velocity of light in some medium.

- We have found a very accurate description of how much light bends any time it moves from an material with one index to another with a different index, over a distinct border. That's Snell's law.

- We can easily measure that air above ground changes temperature, humidity and pressure at different heights above ground.

- We can measure in a lab the refractive index of air for all different pressures, temperatures and levels of humidity. So we can more all less know the refractive index of air at different heights above ground if we simply sample those parameters at different heights at any place in earth.

- We can apply Snell's law to gradually changing refraction indexes by using calculus. All that calculus does is basically take the gradually changing refractive index, and chop it up into tiny little discreet changes with discreet borders, and apply Snell's law at each of these changes. But it does so at "the limit" meaning it assumes an infinite number of infinitesimally small changes of the refraction index, which is effectively simulating a gradual continuous change of the refractive index, like the one we know the air above ground has.

- We have confirmed that this application of calculus works as expected by creating tech like https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Luneburg_lens and https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Graded-index_fiber which work exactly as predicted by the math above.

So do you have any reason to believe the same cannot apply above a lake?

What would you conclude if one day you can see the other shore, the other day you cannot? Did the shape change? would you be prepared to take measurements of the refraction index at different heights above the lake, across the lake, during a day to see how much it varies and get that way a range of possible horizon distances by applying refraction calculations correctly? If after doing that you still predict it's impossible to see the other shore, and you still see it then something is indeed sus.

>and where's the curve? This is footage from a U2 spy plane, and the horizon stays flat What curve did you expect to see exactly? The horizon still needs to hug around you (by definition), so as you rotate your head around, you will never see the horizon dropping angle, doesn't matter how high (in altitude, not on meth) you are, it's still a line going around you so it HAS to close, it HAS to end up at the same vertical angle it starts from (starting at any point). It will never have an inverted U shape when you center your camera on it, that you seem to expect to see, because then how the fuck is that shape closing around you? What you WILL see at a high altitude is a general dip of the angle from the PP plane I described here: >>41969055 From the picrel you cannot measure that angle, since you have no line showing the vanishing line of the PP plane to measure the distance of the horizon to.

> and rises to eye level—just as expected on a level plane

The "eye level" you claim is the same as the PP plane I mentioned above, and you have no indication of what "eye level" is as I already said. You don't even have any indication of how zoomed this image is, to know if we could even tell the distance between horizon and "eye level". If it's too zoomed out the distance wouldn't be visible anyhow, even if you knew where eye level is.

So that just proved absolutely nothing.

I should have said laser instead of camera, which is what i would actually do if i have reason its worthwhile to commit to this. Set up two lasers in a certain distance and measure over many periods if i commit to this. A camera with zoom would only provide the very first tentative probing. If theres no way to see it i would leave it at that and go with the round model. But If i can see it, then i would dig deeper and the proper work.

I saved your points, thanks. These need to be answered and a hypothesis derived. But they would need to account for 40meters (sorry i said 80 earlier, rechecked) missing curvature. Any conclusion needs to be scrutinized until theres no other explanation other than the shape of the earth itself, otherwise its useless und unsatisfactory. It would only give shitflingers more material to throw at each other.

I guess i also answered this. But obviously a somewhat robust amount of measurements and double checking the factors that could distort any result.

I once looked for the best places of measuring such a thing, not because i want to proof one right and the othr wrong, just because i asked myself how and where i could proof such a thing. And next to bolivian salt flats and Antartica this place was top because of the special characteristics of the lake.

It is a schematic representation of a laser system, with a red laser beam highlighted in the center. The beam is shown to be converging and diverging in different directions, as indicated by the arrows pointing towards the near and far fields.

The diagram includes labels for various components and measurements. The laser is labeled as "Laser" and is shown with a red beam, which is the focal point of the laser. The distance (L) is labeled next to the laser, indicating the distance from which the laser is focused. The beam divergence angle (θ) is labeled next to the beam, which is the angle at which the beam is diverging. The beam diameter (D) is labeled next to the beam, which is the diameter of the beam. The figure is labeled "Figure 2" at the bottom, suggesting that this diagram is part of a larger set of figures or a series.

The image is a clear and precise representation of the laser beam's behavior in the near and far fields, providing a visual aid for understanding the concept of laser beam divergence.

>I should have said laser instead of camera

A laser would certainly make it easier to know what you are seeing, but it's still just red light, it's affected by refraction in the same way that the red component of the image you'd see of the other side of the lake would be affected by refraction.

>Set up two lasers in a certain distance and measure over many period

That would be a nice experiment. Still though, what would you conclude if you only saw the laser from the other side some days?

>If theres no way to see it i would leave it at that and go with the round model.

Well... I'm a globe earther, but if I had the laser I would still try the laser, because the reason you don't see the other side MAY be related to the strength of the natural light being too low to see through the noise of the thick fog above the lake. I do not believe that is the case, but a flat earther could easily claim that's the reason you don't always see the other side of the lake. But a laser is way too strong, and you could make it even stronger if you want to, so it can pierce through any thin fog.

>But they would need to account for 40meters

Yeah I also checked it when you said 80m and saw it's about 37m because the distance I could find that seems like would work nicely for an experiment would be about 21.71km. See picrel.

But yeah you are right that refraction must be able to explain that sort of bending above the lake or the combination of the globe model plus refraction is in trouble, and something would need to be changed or added. If I am not mistaken refraction needs to predict just 1/5th of a degree of bending.

How does it explain radio propagation and the behavior of signal strength in relation to the expected horizon of a globe earth (and us being on the outside)? How does it explain the delays of earth-moon-earth amateur radio?

Who told you the soul is energy?

You are not energy.

You have no direct connection to anything material.

Not the world.

Not your body.

Not your mind.

Anonymous Sun 22 Feb 2026 03:08:08 No.42008227 Report

My hot take is soul, mind and body are derivative of each other and in hierarchical order.

The body and it's habitation of the physical world must be aligned so as to feed the mind. The mind and it's habitation of the body must be aligned so as to feed the soul.

The soul and it's habitation of the mind must be aligned so as to feed the ???

>God, universe, loosh farm, take your pick

This all depends on if the universe is objective or subjective, or in other words if we are moving away from the source or towards it.

In short, no, because energy moves in the other way.

The page is divided into two columns, with the left column containing a series of diagrams and text, and the right column containing a series of diagrams and text. The diagrams are in a grid format with lines and arrows, and they depict various concepts related to vitality, energy, and the relationship between these concepts. The text is in a serif font and is arranged in a column format, with the left column containing the title and the right column containing the body of the text.

The diagrams and text are interspersed throughout the page, with the diagrams being more prominent and detailed than the text. The diagrams include representations of energy, vitality, and the relationship between these concepts, such as arrows pointing from one diagram to another, and lines connecting the diagrams. The text is in a smaller font size and is positioned below the diagrams, providing a clear separation between the visual and textual information.

The overall style of the image is academic and technical, with a focus on the scientific and philosophical exploration of vitality and energy. The use of diagrams and text provides a clear and organized presentation of the concepts being discussed.

>Useful tips before posting:

•If you're a reader, post that you're offering readings and what information is required from the querent; the same goes for trading.

•Look for posts to determine if there's an active reader, what's needed and before posting, check if they finished reading already.

•Some readers will refuse to do certain readings - respect that choice. Do not harass readers if your query is refused/skipped. We do our best to maintain chill and good vibes.

•Traders should respect that a traded read will be granted, as per an agreement of trade. Free readers have the option of picking their queries.

•Bullshit queries get bullshit answers. Vague queries get vague answers.

•Making an AQ (air query) by not addressing a reader, in particular, is possible but doesn't guarantee an answer.

•Avoid making the same query repeatedly and/or to different readers in a short period of time, as this may lead to more confusion.

•Provide feedback when applicable and be considerate to the reader. We're a growing community, many readers are starting and need to know what they are doing right or wrong. Let's help each other to improve.

The image is a painting that depicts a scene from a car's interior. The view is from the driver's seat, with the steering wheel in the foreground and the dashboard and instrument panel in the background. The driver's hands are visible, suggesting the person is in control of the vehicle. The car is on a road that appears to be covered in snow, with a metal bridge in the distance. The sky is overcast, and the overall mood of the painting is somber and cold. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image.

Good! Potential for a long term relationship here, even proper settling down eventually including having children. It would be an enjoyable relationship that would adapt well to life's ups and downs, and you would be treated well and feel beautiful and empowered. He would be unlikely to degrade you and I think he has a real reverence for you and is an ally to women. Seven of Pents here tells me that you could both make things work even when life throws you curveballs and you would have good communication and collaboration.

Your first query:

>Five of Swords, Two of Cups

>Nine of Wands, Ten of Cups

Two of your cards from your query showed up here. Let me read the first two as a response. Interestingly, two of cups is here which may mean that love is on the way. But otherwise, the five of swords here is an interesting reflection of the seven of swords. the 5ofS represents open scandal, publicly known issues, while the 7ofS is very private and secretive. Paired with the 2ofC- I think this is telling you to confide your troubles to a loved one. It can also speak to being honest with yourself, write your issues down plainly. Call a truce with yourself and act as your own ally in these issues- it's you and you against the problem, not you vs. you. But you have to be clear with yourself about what's wrong. Reaching out to someone else is better than bottling it up inside. Avoid keeping secrets from yourself or others.

Yes, they are trustworthy and honest. They don't mean you any harm but are more committed to doing what's right and fair than to giving you special treatment.

>>42002541

>The Hermit, Strength, Queen of Cups

Very obvious spread here. She was not ready internally for a relationship, it seems. That's a common excuse for people to end things but these spreads speak to a private spiritual journey, and are quite feminine cards. She may need to work on herself or is being called to a season of spiritual preparation before finding someone in a serious way. She means you no ill will and there is no drama or deception here.

>Six of Wands, Two of Swords

Not intentional, but more like an involuntary response coming from an ego wound. She isn't trying to harm you or hurt you but she is behaving selfishly/manipulatively due to an unseen wound, one that she may not even recognise in herself or understand properly enough to deal with. Maybe tread with caution here.

>>42002562

>The Lovers, Four of Cups

Weird pair of cards. Yes, she likes you, but she may just be feeling apathetic and unmotivated to move things forward. She might be depressed or have her mind on other things. There is romantic potential but it may be slow-going or she may just never muster up the effort.

>>42002569

>Nine of Wands, King of Pents, Six of Pents

You need to brown-nose a wealthy man. You may need to take on a gruelling job or task for someone with more money and power than you and it will take a long time to save up the money, but it will be "solid" money rather than unstable investments or schemes. I'm getting a "swallow your pride" theme here so it may be that you need to find work that you find a little degrading or you need to flatter someone hard to get the cash flow.

>Nine of Pents, Three of Cups, Seven of Pents

Yes, definitely. It will be well-paid and have a nice social atmosphere. But you may need to assess your current plans/actions and see if there's anything you can change that is not as effective as it could be. Networking may be useful, as well as not being afraid to promote yourself more. Aim high and have high standards.

She is making a hand gesture with her right hand, which is raised and slightly curved. Her expression is neutral, and she is looking directly at the camera. The background is plain and white, emphasizing the subject. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the photograph is reminiscent of fashion photography, with a focus on the subject's attire and pose.

So it's a mix of yes on the second one, but so far into the future, I don't see you getting married soon enough to justify holding off on working. Like, you'll need at least five years before you meet someone who's dependable enough to support you, and is an honest person. You'll meet one man soon who may seem like the ticket you want but he'll be a bad person, horrible bad energy. To rectify this, focus on getting yourself into work. I saw something related to nursing, but in home. Hospice care? Something with long hours, fairly hands on, but it's in a comfy environment, and you're beaming with emotional satisfaction. Nursing and treating and helping the vulnerable is a profession that's noble, and will actually support you and keep you independent and financially well until you get married.

Change will definitely come because of death card. But it seems like the story follows that tensions will ease up in terms of having to deal with any rivalries or competition and you won't approach things as heated or as competitive or it could mean that you are not being competitive enough and are burned out and are now going to retreat inside of yourself and see what wisdom or inner development you can facilitate to up skill and you should try and be a little bit more patient because there will be a little bit of a delay but once that's dealt with there will be a complete change for you but after that change you still might have some doubts and hesitations might occur. If you don't become more decisive in what path you have to take then more stagnation may occur then maybe you need to relocate or switch lanes, you know what I mean.

The floor will be some sort of brown tiles in some part of the main floor and there will be computers there with offices. Clear windows with stores or blinds and the place is well lit by sunlight and neon lightning. I didn't see what the actual job is, just when you get there on your first day, your boss (or the boss of the company, the one in charge) is a man, middle aged, well shaven and looking quite serious wearing a suit or at least a dress shirt with a tie or at least a dress shirt.

if this doesn't sound like the first company and you've been to the headquarters during the hiring process, then you will be poached, if it does sound like your job office or place of work, then you won't get poached. All I know is your shift is in the middle of daylight.

Sounds like a yes to me, the practical side of your question is around money so if this is a concern it sounds like something you might want to pull off until you can pay for something of quality and not just some shady whatever.

But otherwise you seem to really want the fillers so yeah that's a green light, find yourself someone who can do the job properly, good quality service will mean paying for it but if you do you will exactly what you are after. So yeah, i think that is a big yes, you are going to be very happy with your fillers

The image is a black and white photograph capturing a panoramic view of the Golden Gate Bridge spanning across a body of water. The bridge, with its distinctive suspension design, is the central focus of the image. It is viewed from a high vantage point, providing a sweeping view of the bridge and the surrounding landscape.

The bridge's cables are clearly visible, with the upper cables appearing to be closer to the viewer than the lower cables. The water beneath the bridge is calm, reflecting the bridge and the sky above.

In the background, a range of mountains can be seen, their peaks covered in snow. The mountains are partially obscured by clouds, adding a sense of depth and scale to the image. The sky above is overcast, with dark clouds suggesting a potentially stormy weather condition.

There are no visible texts or discernible human figures in the image. The photograph is taken during the day, and the lighting is even, with no harsh shadows or highlights. The overall composition of the image suggests a serene and dramatic landscape, with the Golden Gate Bridge as a symbol of human engineering and the natural beauty of the surrounding environment.

The image is a stylized, pop art-style painting featuring a woman with a large, expressive eye. The woman's face is partially obscured by her hair, which is depicted in a bold, stylized manner with a mix of red and blue dots. Her hair is styled in a way that it covers her face, creating a sense of mystery or surprise. The woman's eyes are wide open, and her mouth is slightly open, as if she is in the middle of speaking or expressing an emotion. The background of the painting is a solid, contrasting color, which helps to draw attention to the woman's face. The overall style of the painting is reminiscent of the comic book art style, which is known for its bold colors and dynamic lines.

You're a very nurturing individual so working as like a counselor or psychologist or healer of some sort would suit you. If you already have a career rn it looks like there are some disagreements going on right now and your facing some burnout thats where taking some time to yourself and cleansing meditating would become very useful. Doesnt seem like anything major will get in your way though and you will be successful in your endeavors.

Thank you! I do believe this you have a lovely, wonderful gift to the supernatural! And I truly appreciate giving us these reads for free!

But I have to say, is "just find your passion lol" really all the higher powers have to say? That kind of makes me suspicious. Seems a little too generic, like it's a cover for the real answer.

I fear an entity or entities may be controlling what the interpretation is, and telling you to tell me to "stay on script".

-/x/ schizopost incoming-

The ice skating imagery has ties to another family I used to have spiritual ties with. One I have been lied to and disappointed by time and time again. "Find your passion" sounds like generic advice a teacher would throw at a high schooler to make them shut up about their worries for the future.

Or so I'll let myself be strung along for some kind of fulfillment that won't come.

It helps that my true passion is connecting to and becoming empowered by the spirit world. I am creative, but I write and draw so I can live in another world. The longer I live, the less I feel connected to the real world and the less I become interested in real people. And the powers that be expect someone like me to lead and take action in a world I wish never existed?

--end schizo post-

I'm sorry, but I fear this reading was tampered with by an outside force. You are an amazing reader, I am very impressed they were able to intercept you at all.

But I think I know them when I see it, they aren't very subtle when they've shown you ice skating. I know what they're referring to.

It seemed like they didn't want to actually answer the question, so they gave you a stock phrase instead.

Saturn in Aries (in fall) conjunct Neptune = argument for the management bullshitting

HOWEVER - Saturn is in Venus exile and rules by Mars (other people at your job, L7). Venus is in exaltation. This means it is easy to overestimate your position in relation to other coworkers.

I'm definitely not super confident in my abilities when it comes to reading tarot compared to a lot of readers on this board. Seeing things about people is really new for me also but I've always been able to feel emotions super strongly. Sometimes they feel nice and sometimes it's uncomfortable. I agree that being here can be a huge struggle. I don't really know where the images come from throughout my life I've had a lot of synchronicity and sometimes I feel that it's from past loved ones and other times nature spirits since I feel very close to nature. I also believe that the human mind is capable of so much more than we can comprehend and that there's something else we can tap into energetically which is our higher selves cause we're not our body but a soul having a human experience while on Earth. I think the best thing we can ever do is to stay positive and try our best. It sounds so simple and generic but it's really been in my experience what brings opportunities to me. I'm sure I'm quite a bit older than you and if I could go back I would have wholeheartedly pursued what I was passionate about cause things get a lot harder when you're older you get much more tired and your body just isn't the same. There's still a lot to enjoy but in a different way. Don't waste the time and body you have now. I don't know all the details about what you're talking about but I hope you take care of yourself and find your happiness.

I'm only on my actual job to provide for my mother until she retires. After that, I'm really not interested on money grinding just to survive anymore.
So, it's just an impression of mine or it's a real thing?

Pic related or not. My astral chart. I've heard that the birth chart have hints about such extreme cases, but I know little of astrology.

Thanks, in advance!

I don't really know if there is a choice or not right now, I feel like I know which road to take but I just don't know where that road leads if that makes sense.

Right now its:

Find a place to live and get the hell out of this house that I'm in now. Try my best to do good work at my job (I think I'm going to really like it but I'm nervous) and kinda just figure out how to be just me if that makes sense.

Lol but concretely what are you asking yourself and therefore the universe? What would happen if you tried your best at this job? What would happen if you left this house? It is hard to take action toward something, if you do not know what it is that you are seeking. And not seeking and not-seeking is not the same thing. In other words, inaction can be a state of peace but it cannot be this if it comes from a state that lacks tranquility. Despair and enlightenment can seem outwardly similar but are decidedly not the same thing.

It seemed appropriate to have two reads on this, one card and then a 3 card draw.

For if she saw you, you got:

That'd be a "Yes" and since it's a Page, this indicates the start of something.

For what she was thinking, the result is:

>8 of Pentacles, Reversed

>Strength

She had some criticism about you in whatever you were doing, but it evoked passion from her. The Strength card embodies that passion and Page of Wands in the Reverse describes either her or their perception of you at that time. I'd say the thoughts are mixed in having both good and bad ones stem from her observation(s).

The image is a black and white graphic with a circular border. At the top, the text "The Sign of Michael" is written in a serif font. The central part of the image features a series of symbols arranged in a circular pattern. The symbols are complex and ornate, with various shapes and lines that create a sense of depth and complexity. The text within the circle is not fully legible due to the resolution of the image. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional esoteric or occult symbolism, often associated with the practice of magic or divination.

Yes, Archangel Michael. That is the point of sigils; icons and the like. They're tools to assist in intentionally forming and establishing connections with various entities. You likely have a negative stigma regarding the term "entity", yet refers to, encompasses and includes Angelic forces as well.

This is the ritual I am referring to: <https://www.llewellyn.com/encyclopedia/article/5139>

However, if you are lucky enough to know a guru or someone like this, that would obviously be better. In general, I have significant skepticism about occult traditions that emphasize individual paths because those easily devolved into left-hand paths in their many guises.

There is but one path but many ways to go astray.

It was a solid portrayal of a man in a state of limerence, which I know I've embodied throughout my life. Being in love with the concept of love and the potential of women, yet not considering or wholly aware of the reality of the situation. Or if I was, hoping for a happy ever after. Being a hopeless romantic, looking for external feminine validation in crushes and partners.

The film was a tasty avant garde piece not meant for the general masses.

You were meant to go through that, now that you no longer own a home, will you start living life and work towards a greater goal in the collective or will you still be a lonely ant? will you tie yourself again and let your home own you, or will you own whatever you have and go wherever there's work. and thriving...

The image is a painting that depicts a scene from a medieval setting. In the foreground, a woman dressed in a long, flowing white dress with gold trim is kneeling on a stone floor. She is holding a sword in her right hand and appears to be offering it to a man in a red and gold armor. The man is kneeling on the floor, also holding a sword in his left hand. The woman's posture suggests a gesture of submission or offering.

The image is a still from a film or television scene featuring a shirtless man standing in an urban setting. The man appears to be in his late teens or early twenties, with a muscular build and a slight stubble on his face. He is looking down and to his left, with a serious expression on his face. The lighting in the scene is dim, with a bluish tint, and the background is blurred, suggesting motion or a fast-paced environment. The man's attire is minimal, with only a pair of dark-colored shorts visible. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the actor's expression and the lighting.

You will already have a kid by then, either by that very man or someone else. You will marry a man but I believe he is either Indian, Pakistani or Arab. I see him dressed in green on your wedding day. You will be wearing a white wedding dress, will be very happy. You will kiss a lot that night and party. Big wedding with whole family. It seems like you'll be in a middle eastern country possibly in his family's country. Maybe he is Persian or Iranian, idk. He will have a large beard and will be taller than you by a few inches. You will be well into your 30's by the time it happens. I am seeing a little boy around 4-5 years old seeing his mom get married and it will be a nice day for that boy, he will remember it for the rest of his days. It's your son.

I seem to just see an advice reading. I keep getting hints that this is some sort of "curse" (I can't tell if it's accidental or on purpose, I have a feeling I should not look into it) and it manifests like a prison like string of bright green text that circles you around. I do see you removing it, by making it flow from a horizontal line to a vertical one.

This also gives off a feeling of elongation. Try incorporating, if you haven't, stretching in your routine

Your body looks dark purple. You may have excess energy where you neglect other important areas in your life, and this can also be mirrored in your hormones most likely. I also feel very cold when looking at you. It's like your astral body is surrounded by a lack of energy

I get that you'll make significant results in 2.5ish years. But it won't be the end.

I see you meeting a woman with black hair she is middle aged. I don't know what happens after that, if you decide to take that job or if you go on your own looking for one, fate hasn't decided which one you take yet, its still "up in the air" so to speak, but you will come across a fork in the road, its up to you to decide which timeline you hop into. fyi if its not your manager or boss who recommends you, then someone like a school admin or school teacher will or an older man with a dress shirt will do that for you. late 50's and clean shaven.

Thank you, this is great advice. as for your reading, I see someone reminiscing about the past, they look at their achievements and ahead of them lies a path that is split in 3 separate ways. You need to really think and decide where you want to go off on in the future, picture yourself 5-10-20 years down the line and really picture it, then once that's done, start to work towards it. You have 3 different choices this can go which are all unique and separate, I see you day dreaming and you becoming "delusional" its not delusional if you know you'll get there though is it? so yes you need to believe things will happen and try to imagine these things, sit there quietly and think it through for a while. hope this helps. and thanks again.

some feedback: I am very stressed in general and I know I have to deal with that, I also do a lot of heavy shoulder exercises as I do 150-200-220 lbs overhead-press. I will tone down the heavy lifting follow the advice.

Learn to ask the help of others and reaching out to other like minded people, figure out how to do networking and how to request or get people to help your causes. This is the next step in improving yourself. This person was already ahead in other areas of their life and the remaining things were just an overexertion of themselves.

3 lines of advice came up for you

Firstly decisions in your emotional matters there is something that drags you down and is negatively affecting your sense of peace and stability, something you you drag home or face in at home. this is a situation where you need to be objective and see things as they are, homebuilding or stability at work, you need to stop looking outwards for this to be right and look inwards to find it. First you are a master of you yourself, of what you feel and what you think and then you allow the rest to come to you. You pause and assess and with that clarity of purpose if things don't work for you then you start to enact the changes that your soul calls for, but you need to let go of the rumination, your mind works against you if you let it sit idle with these thoughts, find peace withing first and then externalise it and the fairness you seek will be easier to achieve.

Next line warns me you might be overlooking something health related, ease off the load, rest properly i see lots of stress, burnout and a lack of joy. The way you feel is perfectly valid but your outlets might be causing a very negative effect in you, go eady on yourself and connected with the previous line work on finding your balance again, rest properly and easy off the work you are putting into things

Last line shows me a situation with a woman, someone who is not being entirely honest with you and with whom you wont reach the outcome you are looking for, you are unseen, your efforts are not being recognised, be this romantic or a situation in a professional capacity this is the root of all the other things the cards advice you about. This is a situation that calls for you to communicate clearly and with purpose, own your worth and make it be seen, act with integrity and care, comunicate honestly and you wont have anything to regret

Excuse me? Love you and your query anon

You may need to watch out for her behavior. It's not that she meant it (she likes your ass), it's that there's a hidden, very mean streak to her which may escalate as time goes by. Good news is she seems to be somewhat aware of this and feels ashamed of it. Like she wants to hurt people.

She kinda thought the idea of you bottoming would be hot, but she wants to hurt your feelings but is scared of showing venom

You seem to have already missed your shot with someone who could have been your next girlfriend. Which is strange. Saw someone run towards a girl and grab her, but she disappeared

She won't come too soon, you will find one but it will feel rather unexpected. It'll be during a period where you are so lonely and she'll come to "save" you. I see jet black hair. She likes the color light blue. She's a bit weird but surprisingly well adjusted, has a slight ego issue.

She is young, pretty and short and thin. the next woman is a blonde one with straight long hair that reaches her neck. She will do sexual things with you, not sure if its a gf or just someone you do things with. she will love to give you head. the first woman will be more of a gf than the second. not sure if you're open to fwb but they seem to be focused on that. hope this helps.

No, far from it. You may need to get more confident because they see you as an incredible person who they almost mystify, you seem very passionate to them.

They seem to think it's the opposite, that you're projecting some slight discomfort on them and they're wondering what's going on.

One person does feel burned out but not because of you, they have personal issues and may display lethargic behavior, nothing personal.

>Queen of Pentacles, Reversed

>Wheel of Fortune

>The Hierophant

The spread doesn't start off the best with the Queen in Reverse. No idea whether it refers to P or how they perceive you, yet either way, it denotes somebody unstable or too rigid in their behavior. If it's you, then that gives context for The Hierophant, which is in the upright. I'm taking this as a positive though, that while dogmatic, the discipline associated with whatever traits you have are able to be seen in an understandable manner. The Wheel of Fortune nestled inbetween showcases a sense of a balancing act between the two. Either P sees the both the pros and cons of your characteristics, or that your discipline balances out their own aspects. It also denotes that there is divine guidance in this meeting and that there is or will be forward momentum if this relationship is pursued further.

I shit you not, the Wheel of Fortune has made a return in this spread too. I'm going to interpret that as they definitely can see both the good and the bad when it comes to you. They're wary of what further progress may entail, for better and for worse. The Nine of Cups denotes an abundance of happiness and contentment, with which there must be wariness about not coming off too cocky or smug. The World in Reverse however denotes a manner of incompleteness which is seen. There's some work to be done and resolved, which obviously can be accomplished, but that's the current stance they hold, accurate or not.

I think this is telling me of a situation with your partner or potential partner where you both are not seeing each other eye to eye and there is a general lack of joy and understanding there are things that are getting in the way like past emotional baggage or even trauma and you are both doing it though trying to make this work, cards would tell me that it is a good time to stop take stock and reapproach the situation in a more joyfull manner, trying to reconnect with shared interests.

Outside of a relationship i think these cards are telling you that you are deeply disconnected and dissatisfied in whete you are right now, you are disconnected from your inner guidance and there is no structure yo what you although deep down you want things to be well stablished and well defined, a traditional relationship, a carreer, a house. But you are not aligned towards that internationally you need to reconnect with the things that bring you joy, refind yourself so that you can undertand better what you want for the future, perhaps take a time out, travel a bit, reconnect with yourself and who you are and you will be able to see clearly towards the future

I am going to sound very schizophrenic, but take this as you will and trust me on this if it makes sense for you:

Some entities are mass farming people (especially women) for them to be romantic partners. Most of the time it's not a harem thing but literally shaping them to be what the entity wants. Most of the time it's productive since the goal is a partner, not a whore.

But really be careful in discerning if the entity does want to benefit you. It should manifest as you ironically being well adjusted and having many opportunities given to you. Even having men (not hookups, but long term partners) who have some similarities to the entity.

If you notice that your life sucks in any way or that you feel delusional (oh the irony), cut it off immediately.

I assume it's real because bluntly put, I called it,

She has a soothing personality. I can say that she's either pulling you out of a bad situation, or she's going to help you with that.

I believe that the relationship won't really start on good terms and that's because of you and your current mental state. It's going to take. Her a lot of courage and willpower to approach you somehow. Once she's there, you will going to get acquainted with her presence and you're going to improve with time. She's going to be hesitant, but she's there for a reason. She's going to look past the problems and the way you can treat her at times and will heal your wounds.

I don't know for how long tho. Make sure you're going to care for her as soon as you're capable of for she will wander through your hell.

Lets see if this talks to you

I got hex 6 conflict, unchanging to hex 6 again

conflict can emerge that serves no real purpose other than allowing for someone to vent their frustration. At other times, you might be timid about speaking up in a situation in which you are stuck.

Indecision and ignoring your frustration just leaves you stagnant and saps your energy away without you much knowin it. You may feel wronged by another but sometimes you must realize that they made their choice based on their needs and there is nothing to be done except to seek closure. While conflict always offers a fertile atmosphere for constructive change, there may be no other solution than to use it as a learning experience.

But in the end all things change in time so whatever the conflict, it too will pass.

As such your advice is not to remain silent, but to seek conflict, speak up your mind and make yourself be seen and heard. Take the decisions that take you out of the comfort zone into the ground again no matter how shaky it feels because otherwise you will only remain stagnat where you are

Before completion to small success

Perseverance without force, mutual trust that builds up over time

Pay attention to the small or insignificant details as they are important in this situation.

The weak force is more powerful than gravity. The smallest of life forms are the most successful. Appreciating what is small is called enlightenment.

What you are being told here is that this is an ongoing work that takes lots of patience and must be done without force, mutual trust must be built overtime and the natural flow of things need to be preserved but not passively but with small tangible actions that guide the flow towards an outcome. Being present, paying attention to the little details and generally cultivating an environment of safety and mutual understanding is what will lead to this relationship to become deeper, when both parts understand quietly that they can count on each other and the love exists unconditionally

The second hexagram also says that

The hidden influence of Critical Mass also shows a type of instability that is going through a transition. An adjustment may be required for better foundational support.

Part of the process also involves one adjusting to the other, a relationship is a complex system of compromises and equal amounts of give and take

It is not just your partner who needs to adjust you also need to adjust to your partner and that is a slow and ongoing process as well

hidden influence 23 Split Apart: Regenerate underlying cause, Great Power: Invigorate

Outcome as the 2nd Hexagram: Examine the patterns that create the same outcome.

You can only lead others toward growth if you are willing to grow yourself.

The advice is to use this time to think and contemplate on what led you to where you are right now, what is the root cause of the split and where you want to go next. What was your part in this, take stock on your actions, where you really had control and where you did not, what can you change, where can you compromise. Your paths split because there was a fundamental misalignment of who you are in this very specific place and time, if your paths are to join again you need to understand then what is it that you need to change for there to be alignment and for there to be a union the other part, D needs to realise this too. The time split for contemplation is not just for you but also for them. You can revisit things later on but only after you both have grown, and you both had your time to see and understand objectively the role that each of you is meant to play on each others life

36.6 brightness hiding changes to 22 grace

First light then darkness, you climb up and then you fall. It is a shifting perspective as there is no one guaranteed aspect that makes a situation inherently bad or good. The community you live in has both the good and the bad, the things you can connect and the ones you cant reconcile as such you are advised to accept "Divine providence is at play in this situation.

When you lose your way, life always hands you a map that says: you are here."

"With Oppression as the underlying cause, there was an opportunity to learn to Adapt or make changes to better fit in with the changes around us. Now it is time to connect with an inner source of light. Grace is an attitude of Acceptance that radiates outwardly as joy, regardless of what is unfolding around you."

To put it simply you are being asked to adapt to your surroundings to adopt an attitude of grace and understanding with those around you and the elements of your community that you can't tolerate.

At least at this time, in the end i feel you will walk away from all this and move somewhere else but for now this is what you are advised to do

49.6 transformation changes into 13 fellowship

Unhappiness is the first sign that something powerful stirs within you.

"beginning brings misfortune but to remain persevering brings good fortune."

And as the flow changes

"you are undergoing a deep transformation that others may not understand. While attempting to conform to the needs or expectations of others you lose your way. Because you persevere through change eventually success is achieved."

Following your heart and giving things another chance seem to be the path forwards not because it is something that is meant to be from a calling higher than you but at the contrary it is the inner quiet voice and hope that you yourself are feeling right now, to dare to venture again and come back with what you have learned and with your change in perspective things can steer in a different direction this time.

The simple act of asking this question brings you one step closer to understand what you truly want to hear

Hexagram 6

Creativity and the action of initiating things

Empowerment is at the core of your question.

"Life shows its harmony when you discover your connection to what unfolds.

Sunlight over clouds

Lifted up by what is pressed down, the Great untangles the night."

The Creative embodies the active principle in the universe and represents initiating action. This is an exagram that asks you to tap on your own creative inner vision and to action your plans Unchanging Dragon stirring unexpressed = action is needed to give it form. The Creative unchanging shows powerful feelings or inspiration not acted upon.

Quite simply your biggest obstacle right now is you yourself, it is your inaction and your fear to follow through with your vision and dreams. This is a bit like the magician reversed, you are not tapping your inner resources to manifest the things that you want, this hexagram unchanging tells me that you quite simply need to initiate things for them to flow and complete, sitting stagnant is a waste of your own power and if you don't push forward by your own volition you will never get to enact the changes you want to see in your life.

Hex 20.1.2 contemplation changes to 61 inner truth

Childish contemplation = acceptable for a child but not an adult. Changes to (42) Increase.

You must take responsibility of your own action, your own thinking and your own plans

Contemplation through the crack of the door = not seeing everything. Changes to (59) Dispersion. It is not helpful to place yourself in the center of a situation with a wishful attitude.

"The truth may not follow popular consensus or your expectations but it is the truth nonetheless.

Do not seek to follow in the footsteps of the wise. Seek what they sought"

Quite simply you are being guided to take a good hard look at what you are asking and stop making poor excuses for yourself because quite frankly, you already know the answer to your question you are just expecting external validation, and even if that validation comes (which hey it is right here !) You will still find excuses to drag yourself back and not follow through with what you want , or plan, to do

So quite simply, yes of course you should look for a physical outlet you already know why this is good for you, you already have a general idea of how to do it. You simply need to start and plan in a way that caters to you and your specific circumstances. You will not start a routine full on at the level of an athlete because you simply won't follow through but you can always start small and build small Action recommended by hex 61 nurture and trust. Create a plan with realistic expectations and goals and trust in it to take you where you want to be

35 lines 3.4.5.6 changes into 39 obstruction

3

All are in accord = remorse disappears. Changes to (56) Wanderer. Previous disagreements or misunderstandings are cleared up through clarification.

4

Progress like a squirrel = perseverance brings danger. Changes to (23) Split Apart. You don't have the necessary skills to accomplish something in this situation.

5

Remorse disappears without thought of gain or loss = undertakings bring good fortune and everything furthers. Changes to (12) Obstruction. The Obstruction presents an obstacle that is not easily overcome.

Progressing using horns is beneficial but presents danger =, no blame although perseverance in aggression will lead to humiliation. Changes to (16) Enthusiasm. There is a careful balance of how much force is needed in this situation.

It is not a matter of you being unlikeable it is that you have a completely messed up system of internal block that lead you to being pushy, domineering, needy and bring about your own outcomes simply by the way you behave. These are internal blocks that yourself need to get rid of for things to flow towards the direction that you want to see

And changing towards 39 obstruction tells you

Before you can proceed you need to honor the obstacle for what it is teaching you.

Adversity is how life unleashes your excellence from within.

You have a lot of lessons that you need to integrate from your past interactions and your romantic pursuits, there is something that is clearly not working out for you and you need to learn so that you can grow and bring about the partnership that you seek, it is perfectly fine if you do need time to work on yourself, become someone who first learns to love themselves and then you can come about learning how to love another. It is important that you understand that one's own attitude towards yourself is what you will mirror back towards another in a relationship. 1/2

So the recommendations is not a punishment, it is a advice to guide you towards a truth that you have not been made aware of first so that you can change and attract the things you want, once you understand the root of your feelings and why you need to ask this question in the first place then you can proceed to become a better version of yourself that will bring about inner joy, which once externalised because you overflow with it will be noticed and be found attractive by someone, bringing about the relationship you are looking for.

So yeah, the answer is that yes you will, but do your internal work first and you wont recognise yourself in a couple of years. You wont believe the places life will take you through if you carry with joy and optimism

> Temperance, 3 of cups rx, 6 of pentacles rx

Well first of all they are definitely trying to get a grip of themselves, they are trying to focus on healing and finding themselves again after something that happening to them.

Not very open to going out and spending a whole lot of time with friends they are focused inwards and that is not opening up much for other people in their life

What can i tell about this person ?

> Queen of wands, empress, knight of swords, ace of swords

Strong feminine influence so i would say that this woman you have been talking to is someone who is very open, social and really quite likeable, very good looking or someone who really is very comfortable in her own skin, an absolute go getter but can be harsh with words and be prone to leave things hanging and leaving people in a nebulous unknown because they have an inability to say things straight and rather spin things around

What can you do ?

King of cups falls down

Then the king of cups comes up again

> King of cups rx, 6 of cups, the moon rx

You just need to be present, emotionally honest and and caring, you have developed a bond with this person she wont leave you out in the air out of malice but she is very focused internally, interested in you but not to the extent to have something serious. At least not for now, what you do need to you is set asude all of these doubts and fears you have something to an extent going with her, she is not fully disconnected from you, but for now there are other things that she is looking into and all you have to do is be there, present, caring. The more she opens up with you the more you botb see each other for who you trully are [10 / 3]The image is a close-up of a one-dollar bill featuring a stylized depiction of the Great Seal of the United States. The central focus is a pyramid with a triangle at the apex, which is surrounded by a circle with the text "ANNUIT COEPTIS" inscribed around the edge. Above the pyramid, there is an eye, and below the pyramid, the phrase "NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM" is written. The background of the image is a light green color, and there are intricate patterns and designs that give the impression of a coin or currency. The style of the image is reminiscent of historical or classical coin designs, with a focus on symbolism and text.

Probably letting money control and distort your thoughts (head) or your actions (hand) regarding truth and morality.

My understanding is that the beast depicts the nature of earth/reality and that being marked by it is to become a part of it, or to lose concept of there being something greater than it.

If there is nothing greater than our base desires and subjection to this world then it hardly makes sense to aspire to something higher than it if that doesn't exist. Therefore, faith in something greater removes the mark of the beast.

If we were trading gold coins would it be any different?

How do you determine that a bushel of apples is worth 1 gold coin? The market determines these things irrespective of the actual material value or rarity of the gold.

What happens when 300 tons of gold is cast as gold coins? The apples are now more "expensive" because more people have more gold coins.

Yes fiat currency is kind of bullshit, but all money is subject to the fluctuations of the economy and is therefore never 100% valid the same way 1 person = 1 life.

I know nothing about economics and yet I understand this much.

The American dollar is not the mark of the beast.

What did Christ say about money?

Render unto Ceasar what is Ceasars.

The prophets spent money to fund the journeys from town to town as Jesus performed miracles. He never once said money was evil or wrong to use.

[56 / 14]The image is a painting that depicts a scene of intense combat. At the center of the composition, there is a large, fierce-looking leopard with its mouth open, roaring. The leopard's fur is a deep red, and its eyes are wide and focused. Behind the leopard, there are four smaller, similar-looking lions. They are also roaring and appear to be in a state of aggression. The background is a warm, earthy color, possibly a shade of yellow or orange.

In the foreground, there is a person lying on the ground, covered in blood. The person appears to be dead or unconscious, with their head and limbs exposed. The person's clothing is red, which contrasts with the surrounding colors. The painting style is realistic with a focus on the action and intensity of the scene. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image.

Is it just to "formalize"/larp/cosplay sadistic chimpouts and their fetish for sadism and cruelty, and attach a philosophy of total moral nihilism and power/ domination ?

Besides to further traumatize and confuse their victims (SRA, Monarch), do they believe they are stealing their energy when they feed off their fear, pain, and suffering ("energy vampires")? What do they (freemasons??) believe they achieve/ accomplish/ gain in a metaphysical sense? Do they really believe in a god (satan/ baal/ moloch/ saturn?) to sacrifice to, or is it to symbolize they are "acting as gods" through performing torture/ trauma/ killing? Do they all share one coherent/ cohesive system of beliefs, and does it go back beyond Egypt to Sumer (or even earlier)?

I understand it's slavery taken to the most brutal and perverted forms, but what do they "actually" believe? Do they really believe they are inviting demons to possess them, or is it metaphor for "switching down" to their primitive "reptilian" base predator mode to engage in sadism? Are most of the perps abused/ traumatized and groomed to develop sadistic "split" personalities as cult initiation/ bloodline tradition? I've read they create an "energy duplicate" for themselves in these rituals, what does that mean and how tf does that work even lol

^ I "understand" that they worship power and for them that's manifested in a perverse sadistic fetish for brutal domination and control of human life as slaves/ robots/ objects for sex and torture (monarch). I can believe there's even "normies" (as in not esoteric elites lol) with similar fetishes and (a)moral philosophies.

Some of them (elites) who are halfway in the club already deep in degeneracy, would be coerced to engage in acts that even they find repulsive - but they're too deep to get out at that point. Are the rituals more to destroy/ corrupt their soul as initiation into the cult?

Demons etc are real, to commune with them they use several ways. The most common is invocation, that's what you're picking up on when you suspect they're doing sra like a sort of mental primer to induce a state of mind more enticing or susceptible to the spirits. You're correct to postulate the victim/offering is only part of the equation in that regard. Evocation also supposedly occurs and they witness the spirits in physical form like a humanoid or as something like shadow or mist, but it seems this is usually a last resort, i.e. the spirits they call up don't even like them and treat them as cogs or fodder. Some have said this is why the sacrifice actually occurs, the moment a soul leaves the body it pierces the veil so to speak and a spirit can use that hole to manifest in our world through the ritual. There is also another developing way disclosed by insiders who mention their Cerebro computer or global AI, which allegedly interfaces with the archons or their spirits in digital form to deliver their plans or critiques via text.

Do the cult elites seek to deliberately "invite" demons in (like vampires if there's truth to the myth) to be possessed themselves, to extend life and gain power through energy vampirism? Does the demon become a permanent co-personality inhabiting the host? Does it influence/ require them to keep engaging in violent rituals to "feed"?

I think writers like David Icke or Tracy Twyman have said so, yes. Supposedly that is why MKUltra and Monarch have roots in Tavistock whose mind control experiments in the 1800-1900's consulted with occultists like Oscar Wilde and co. Before social tech and letter agencies, mass mind control was said to be accomplished with ritual and demons. The word pan-demon-ium breaks down into synonyms of everyone-demon-infested.

interesting, I never heard of Tavistock before - So this all started from SIS/ MI6 (also freemasons?) > Nazi experiments in Auschwitz/ Dachau> Gottlieb and MK Ultra?

Have the royal/ elite cult bloodlines been practicing these rituals as tradition and deliberate intergenerational trauma as initiation? I've read that it has roots in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, which shows ritual torture/ trauma, drug potions, and hypnosis to mind control their slaves. I wonder if they were attempting to invoke demons in their slaves?

SRA from what I understand also uses drugs and hypnosis to dissociate and fragment their victim's consciousness, is a dissociated/ trance state induced for them to be possessed?

The image is a black and white photograph featuring three individuals in a dimly lit room with a star-shaped design in the background. On the left, a man in a suit is standing with his hands clasped behind his back, facing the center of the room where a large, metallic robot statue is positioned. The robot, which appears to be a humanoid figure, is standing on a platform and is facing the man. The robot's body is composed of multiple metallic plates and joints, and it has a humanoid head with a visor.

In the center of the room, a woman in a long dress is standing with her hands clasped behind her back, facing the robot statue. She appears to be observing the robot. To the right, another man in a suit is standing with his hands clasped behind his back, facing the robot statue. He is also observing the robot.

The room has a reflective floor and the walls are made of dark material, possibly stone or concrete. The lighting in the room is dim, with the only source of light coming from the robot statue and the two men observing it. There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the photograph is reminiscent of early 20th-century photography,

The image is a painting that depicts a figure with a large, expressive face, possibly a demon or a monstrous creature, with a fierce expression. The figure has a long, flowing mane of hair and is holding a large, red object in its hand, which appears to be a piece of meat or a similar object. The background is dark, with a gradient of dark to light, and there is a sense of mystery or foreboding. The painting style is realistic with visible brushstrokes, and the color palette is dominated by earthy tones, with the red object providing a stark contrast. The genre of the artwork is not definitively clear, but it could be a representation of a mythological or supernatural figure.

I thought all conspiracies were schizo retard slop till 2019 (right before epstein and covid lol) until I saw Kim Noble's art and got into a pizzagate/ SRA/ Project Monarch rabbithole. Most cases of SRA in daycares were dismissed as "satanic panic" and alleged victims of Project Monarch were also dismissed - most of them had mental issues (which could explain delusional/ false memories, but also could be the result of trauma). I was still inclined to believe some if not all accounts I read, but there was no real definitive proof and it was 2 disturbing at a point I just dropped it.

Then Epstein got arrested later that year, and the official story at the time was, "almost legal 17 yr old girls consensually sold sex to rich guys". That's convenient, I thought, that the girls all happened to be months from legal age in a huge blackmail ring. Were they hiding something worse?

Last few weeks the Epstein emails were released, only a bare fraction of it visible but there's emails implying (often in code) much more depraved behavior (torture, trauma, killing, girls as young as 14-11 possibly younger). Makes you think about the power structures and people that protected him for so long, and question if many alleged victims of SRA and project Monarch were also silenced or unable to fight through corruption and conspiracy in the system (ex:Michael Aquino and the Presidio army base childcare center)

Yep, "Satanic Panic" was an exposure and cover up of government child trafficking through satanic cult fronts. Look into the False Memory Foundation, key debunkers that helped make victims and whistleblowers of pedo rings out to be crazy. The image shows a stone carving that appears to be a part of a monument or sculpture. The carving is triangular in shape with a pointed top, and it is set against a dark background, which highlights the details of the carving. The carving features various symbols and figures, including a sun-like figure at the top, a crescent moon, a circle, a triangle, and a square. There are also two figures that resemble human figures, one with a raised arm and the other with a raised hand. The figures are surrounded by other symbols, such as a cross, a circle with a line through it, and a stylized representation of a tree. The carving is made of a material that appears to be stone, and the details are finely carved, suggesting a high level of craftsmanship. There is text on the carving, but it is not legible in the image provided. The style of the carving is reminiscent of ancient or classical art, and it is likely to be of historical or cultural significance.

The group(s) that engage in these rituals aren't "mainstream" judaism (or freemasonry, jesuit, etc)

The rituals/ practices come from esoteric pre-Judaic cults, whose members either then formed Judaism or infiltrated it and took control as the cultural elite while covertly practicing ancient rituals to the early Caananite gods (El, Baal Hadad, Dagon) - which I'd assume originated from even older deities and cults lost in time to all but the initiated (who knows what's in the vatican?)

>if you do human sacrifice is shows DEMONS that you have skin in the game, so that DEMONS will be a force multiplier in your life / for your cause.

God doesn't need to be shown anything by you. He knows what you are going to do before you do it, and he knows exactly why you want to do it in your inmost mind.

>DEMONS automatically ignore prayers made without sacrifice.

God has no prerequisite for prayer, and because he's all knowing and all present, he listens to all your prayers by default.

>another way to get DEMONS' attention is to take extreme risks (DEMONS favor the bold, who dares wins).

All things are possible through God, and many have been martyred for God's truth, but you don't get more or less attention from him by your actions, re: being all present and all knowing.

About the only thing you got right is the very rough jist of Supposedly the "ellites" believe in a mix of ancient mystery religions combined with esoteric kabbalism and gnosticism, where the "problem of evil" is rationalized by God/ Demiurge being above our human morality. So these guys seek to ascend/ transcend humanity and become gods through embodying their "amoral" concept of god by engaging in ritual acts of depravity. Their rationale is; if "everything" is God, then everything including "evil" and "bad" (death, torture, rape) is just as sacred and holy as "good". Basically mystical kabbalist nihilism

There's the theory they just worship the anti-god cuz it happens to align with being a pedo/ sadist, and they project their sociopathy to an amoral but powerful God that rewards them for sacrificial chimpouts

The image is a meme featuring a colorful, abstract painting with a face that appears to be a mix of human and tree-like features. The painting is filled with vibrant colors and patterns, including shades of green, yellow, orange, and purple. The face has large, expressive eyes and a wide smile. Above the painting, there is a text overlay in white font that reads "POV: You are a convict in 1961 and the friendly CIA man asks you questions after you had some candy." The text is centered and appears to be a play on the phrase "you are a prisoner of war" from the Cold War era, suggesting a humorous or satirical context. The overall style of the image is playful and whimsical, with a focus on the juxtaposition of the abstract art and the text.

On a related note, Elizabeth Loftus, of False Memory Foundation fame, and known associate of serial killers like Bundy and their network, shows up in the Epstein drops.

She has connections to Doug Mysekos, aka Lucien Greaves, faggot edgelords extraordinaire, Founder of The Satanic Temple and propagator of Process Church doctrine but for fat queer goths.

The agenda of these people is to run cover for satanic/occult crime and the victimization of children via absurd levels of gaslighting. Doug calls the 764/O9A offshoots and their crimes just Russian propaganda, despite loads of evidence to the contrary. Doug himself was mentored by OG founders of The Process, Timothy Wiley.

They glow, and these hysteric evangelicals that don't approach these issues with tact just push the discourse away from the true evil and do more harm than good by not doing proper investigative work.

[1 / 1]The image is a digital illustration of a floor plan or schematic of a building, likely a religious or historical structure, given the presence of symbols and references to specific locations and rooms. The layout is divided into two main sections: the upper section, which is a circular diagram with a central figure, and the lower section, which is a rectangular diagram with a central column.

The upper section of the diagram features a central figure that appears to be a person, possibly a religious figure, surrounded by various symbols and architectural elements. The central figure is surrounded by a ring of symbols, including a cross, a star, and a triangle, which are commonly associated with religious symbols.

The lower section of the diagram is a rectangular diagram with a central column. This column is flanked by two columns on either side, and there are several smaller columns and pillars in the surrounding area. The diagram includes a series of lines and arrows, possibly indicating pathways or routes within the building.

In the lower right corner of the image, there is a text box with the caption "Coming Soon at 11:30 AM EST." This suggests that the image is part of a series of images or a series of documents that will be released at a specific time.

The image is in grayscale, with no color, and the style of the illustration is technical and detailed, typical of architectural or historical design documents. The use of symbols and the layout of the diagram suggest that the image is intended to provide a detailed and precise representation of the building's structure and layout.

The object has a series of interconnected lines and shapes that form a complex pattern.

At the top of the circle, there is a small arrow pointing to the right, indicating a direction or a point of interest. The design is intricate and appears to be a stylized representation of a compass rose, which is a traditional symbol used to indicate cardinal directions. The style of the image is minimalist and abstract, with a focus on the geometric shapes and

[1 / 1]The image is a digital illustration of a Hindu deity, likely a representation of the Hindu god Vishnu. The deity is depicted in a traditional pose with a calm and serene expression. He is adorned in a purple and gold robe, with a white sash draped over his left shoulder. The deity's right hand holds a lotus flower, a symbol of purity and divinity in Hinduism. His left hand holds a conch shell, which is often associated with the sound of the universe and is a significant element in Hindu iconography.

The deity's head is crowned with a golden headdress, which is typical of many Hindu deities. The background of the image is a gradient of warm colors, with a hint of blue at the top and a gradient of orange and yellow at the bottom, creating a sense of depth and atmosphere. The overall style of the image is realistic with a focus on detail and color, and it is likely intended to be used in religious or spiritual contexts.

Zombie imagery is abundant in religious myth.

>Jesus (died and came back to life, spooked the witnesses)

>Osiris (dies and comes back to life briefly; from whom the stereotypical green rotting skin in popular zombie depictions ultimately derives)

>Vishnu (blue skin symbolizes asphyxiation, the many arms represent the motion in the helpless flailing of a choking person)

The ancients were trying to tell us bodily death isn't irreversible, and its secrets are only for the initiated and learned. It's also the same source of vampiric folklore, Vampires are just another name for the very same phenomenon observed in conniving silence by the few who know.

In the lower left quadrant, there are two smaller figures, one of which appears to be a child, and another figure that resembles a bird or a mythical creature. The background is a pale, light-colored wall with a faint outline of a landscape, and there are boats with sails and oars in the water, suggesting a maritime setting. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of medieval art, with its use of color, line, and composition.

First Trumpet: Fire on the Earth.

"Hail and fire mixed with blood were thrown upon the earth."

Inner reading: The first spark, the descent of spirit into matter, awareness striking the ground of being. The "hail" is cold intellect; the "fire" is passion; the "blood" is life-force. They clash, reason meets emotion and the psyche's first landscape burns. A third of the trees and grass (symbols of natural order and instinct) are scorched. Awakening of conflict between old innocence and new consciousness.

[30 / 8]The image is a digital illustration with a surrealistic style, featuring a man's face in the center. The man appears to be in a contemplative or meditative state, with his eyes closed and a slight smile on his lips. Above his head, there is a depiction of an angel with wings, and below his head, there is a depiction of a devil with horns and a tail. The background is a gradient of warm colors, transitioning from a light blue at the top to a deep red at the bottom.

Overlaying the image, there is a quote in white text that reads, "A mind full of Godly desires is a mind control by the Holy Spirit. But a mind full of earthly desires is a mind control by the devil spirit." The text is centered and is in a larger font size than the rest of the image, drawing attention to the message it conveys. The overall tone of the image is serious and spiritual, with a focus on the contrast between the good and evil forces within the human mind.

Sounds like your God is a demiurge or Satan. You should turn from your evil ways, kill the evil within you with good acts. Repente & be right with your maker.

>ask, be patient. It's a comforting presence.

Music has a profound relationship with the Holy Spirit, as evidenced in various biblical accounts. For instance, in the Old Testament, the prophet Elisha called for a musician to invoke the Spirit of the Lord, demonstrating how music can facilitate divine encounters. Similarly, King David, known for his musical talents, used his harp to soothe King Saul, illustrating the healing and transformative power of music Music produces vibrational states in people by creating physical sound waves that interact with our bodies, brains, and emotions, leading to physiological, neurological, and emotional changes.

>Physical and Neural Resonance

When music is played, sound waves travel through the air and enter the ear, causing the eardrum and the ossicles to vibrate. These vibrations move the fluid in the cochlea, converting mechanical energy into electrical signals that the auditory cortex processes . The brain then propagates these signals across multiple regions—including the temporal lobe, limbic system, hippocampus, and motor areas—activating emotional, cognitive, and motor responses

. This widespread brain activation illustrates that music generates internal vibrational resonance throughout the nervous system. In structured forms like rhythm, the brain achieves an "altered(elevated or lowered) state of consciousness" where movement, heart rate, breathing, and neural activity synchronize with musical beats appearance, suggesting a rough or uneven surface. There are no texts or discernible actions in the image. The style of the illustration is realistic with a focus on the Buddha's serene expression and the intricate details of his attire.

He is wearing a robe that drapes down to his feet, and the robe has a pattern that includes a series of vertical lines and a series of horizontal lines. The Buddha's head is adorned with a large, round, and intricately designed headdress, which is embellished with small, round, and possibly golden or metallic elements. The background of the image is a light beige or off-white color, and it has a textured

I don't know why most people here don't want to be responsible for anything.

In my opinion, anyone who wants full control over anything wants full control over everything. And that's just a sign that you don't want to be blamed for anything. Because if you are the one in charge, there is no to point the finger at you.

And full control is a mirror of no control over anything at all. And this again means you're not responsible for what happens.

I don't think it's possible to have some control but not all of it or none of it. It's an either/or type of situation.

I don't think any ideas which place the reader in either of these categories is sufficient for the growth of the reader

Hey guys, this isn't exactly paranormal, but since Jung was all into mysticism and whatnot i figured i'd post something here that i found really interesting and potentially life-changing

So this girl i've been stuck on for 3 years (bear with me, its relevant) did something that made me realize that we'd never get together and that i was just beeing played, i was crashing out hard for a day and then i decided to try something. Anima reintegration, basically i got a notebook and was speaking to my anima through it, the idea was that i projected my anima on that girl and i needed to reclaim it, after that page and a half "chat" i had with it i felt empty for a while, but not in a bad way, just as if the sadness had been flushed and the next day i felt the happiest i had felt since i can remember, i was caught myself smiling at nothing instead of the regular neutral face i usually have. the feeling of pure joy i had yesterday kinda calmed down in the meantime and now its just a quiet, overall positive feeling. Have any of you had similar experiences? Have you tried shadow work? How did it went?

Thanks for reading my blog.

The image is a digital illustration featuring six characters from a fantasy game or series, each labeled with a name and a descriptive term. The characters are depicted in a stylized, fantasy-inspired style with detailed armor and weapons. The background is black, and the characters are arranged in two rows, with three characters in the top row and three in the bottom row.

Starting from the top, the first character is labeled "Black Mage" and is shown with a black hat, a black cloak, and a black staff. The second character is labeled "Paladin" and is shown with a white robe, a white staff, and a white shield. The third character is labeled "Bard" and is shown with a white hat, a white staff, and a white cape. The fourth character is labeled "Thief" and is shown with a black hat, a black staff, and a black cape. The fifth character is labeled "White Mage" and is shown with a white hat, a white staff, and a white cape. The sixth character is labeled "Ranger" and is shown with a white hat, a white staff, and a white cape.

Each character's name is written in a bold, capitalized font, and the descriptive terms are written in a smaller, sans-serif font. The characters are arranged in a grid format, with each character occupying its own space. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of a fantasy game interface, with a focus on the characters and their abilities.

The image is a painting that depicts a chaotic scene of a city under siege. The cityscape is filled with smoke and fire, suggesting a fire or explosion. In the foreground, there is a large, muscular figure with a humanoid head, which appears to be a statue or sculpture, holding a large, round, dark object that could be a shield or a weapon. The figure is surrounded by a crowd of people, some of whom are running away from the statue, while others are trying to reach it. The people are dressed in various styles of clothing, including robes and tunics, and some are carrying objects such as baskets and shields. In the background, there are buildings with columns and a large, imposing structure that resembles a temple or a palace. The sky is filled with dark clouds, and the overall color palette is dominated by dark tones, with the exception of the bright blue of the water in the foreground. The painting style is realistic with a focus on the action and the details of the scene, and it is executed in a realistic manner, capturing the intensity and chaos of the moment. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image.

The image is a painting that depicts a figure with a large, expressive face, possibly a demon or a monstrous creature, with a fierce expression. The figure has a long, flowing mane of hair and is holding a large, red object in its hand, which appears to be a piece of meat or a similar object. The background is dark, with a gradient of dark to light, and there is a sense of mystery or foreboding. The painting style is realistic with visible brushstrokes, and the color palette is dominated by earthy tones, with the red object providing a stark contrast. The genre of the artwork is not definitively clear, but it could be a representation of a mythological or supernatural figure.

after i was done, i was feeling "empty" in a good way, something similar to how you feel after you get a good cry out of you that's been stuck for ages, the joy came the next day, my conversation with my anima was something like we were two estranged friends making up, she asked me for forgiveness and i did the same, it was like speaking to a part of your soul. i know how this shit sounds but that's the feeling i got, give it a go if you need it, worse case scenario nothing really changes. good luck anon

[19 / 7]The image is a digital illustration featuring a stylized depiction of a mythical creature. The creature is a large, muscular figure with a dark, almost black skin tone. It has a prominent, muscular chest and shoulders, and its back is adorned with a golden, striped pattern that suggests a protective or regal design. The creature's head is crowned with a golden headdress, and it has a fierce expression with its mouth open, revealing sharp teeth.

The creature is standing on a raised platform, which is partially submerged in water, indicating that it is in a pool or a similar body of water. The water reflects the light, creating a shimmering effect around the creature.

In the background, there is a structure that appears to be a temple or a palace, with columns and a dome-like roof. The sky is clear and blue, suggesting a sunny day. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Egyptian or mythological art, with a focus on the creature's imposing presence and the architectural elements of the background. There is no text present in the image.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a cartoon rabbit character. The rabbit is depicted with a white body, blue ears, and a blue hat with a checkered pattern. The rabbit's eyes are closed, and it appears to be in a relaxed state. The character is wearing a blue coat with a white collar and a red bow tie. The rabbit's arms are crossed, and it has a slight smile on its face.

The rabbit is engaged in a conversation with a character who is speaking in speech bubbles. The character is wearing a blue hat with a white band and a blue coat with a white collar. The text in the speech bubbles is in a playful, casual tone, and it reads:

"I hate you.

then why you want to sleep with me?"

The character's dialogue is accompanied by a pink speech bubble with the text:

"because I will show you how brave I am and er, find your creakiness on bed."

The character's dialogue is followed by a pink speech bubble with the text:

"there are nothing gay to sleep with, male human philosophy?

you fear me? I'm a pathetic fagot."

The character's dialogue is followed by a pink speech bubble with the text:

"sound cool, but no thanks, gay bunny."

The overall style of the image is cartoonish and expressive, with a focus on the character's facial expressions and body language. The image is likely intended to be humorous or satirical, as indicated by the playful and confrontational dialogue.

The Dead-Granny Funeral-Money Paradox: Why "Rich Ayys" Avoid the Antarctica Poverty DLC

This paradox explains why "leaked" alien interviews in Antarctica are a logistical train wreck. It's like a grandmother rising from the dead to work a minimum-wage shift at McDonald's just to pay for the coffin she already gave away in her inheritance.

The Interdimensional Gas Bill: In the 2026 economy, gas is a luxury. Spending trillions in "intergalactic credits" to travel light-years just to land in a resource-dry freezer with zero Wi-Fi is a deficit of common sense. It's high-cost travel for a low-tier destination.

The Hostile Workplace: If Granny gets fired for "smelling like a corpse," aliens are firing themselves by choosing Antarctica. Having tech to warp space-time but choosing to shiver in a hostile snowstorm instead of a quiet, resource-rich base on the Moon or Mars is the ultimate "Poverty DLC" experience.

The Third-Wheel Obsession: Why the Earth-fixation? It's like Granny digging her own grave in a busy playground just to be near people. These "Rich Ayys" act like cosmic stalkers, paying premium fuel prices to watch a human relationship (Earth) that doesn't even know they exist.

Economic Collapse: In this metaphor, the "leakers" steal the logic like greedy grandchildren. They portray advanced beings as so incompetent they end up "dying in a ditch" (a grainy 240p video) because they couldn't afford a better plan than hiding under a mile of ice.

Summary: The theory is a logistical nightmare. If you have the money for interdimensional gas, you don't spend it to sit in a wasteland. It's the ultimate "Granny has to work to afford being dead" scenario—a circular loop of nonsense where the cost of the trip far outweighs the "zero resources" reward.

If the "Dead-Granny Paradox" wasn't enough, we need to talk about the "Feathered IRS." Antarctica isn't a lawless wasteland; it's a high-tax jurisdiction managed by Emperor Penguins who run the most ruthless parking racket in the galaxy.

The Interstellar Parking Fee: Every 15 minutes a UFO stays parked on an ice plate, the Penguin Union demands "Landing Taxes" in synthetic krill. Since these "Rich Ayys" spent all their credits on 2026 interdimensional gas, they can't pay. Result? Their ships get "frozen-towed." That's why you never see them fly in 4K—they're literally hiding from bird-collectors.

The Seal HR Department: If an alien tries to "doze off" in a snowstorm to save energy, they trigger the Seal Labor Laws. Leopard Seals act as the enforcers of the "Hostile Environment Bonus." They demand a cut of the alien's tech just for the right to shiver in peace. If the alien refuses, the seals "leak" their location to scientists, hence the grainy 240p footage.

The "Coupê" of the Iceberg: Just like Granny being fired for smelling like rot, aliens are being "taxed" for their lack of hygiene. The Penguins charge a "Biological Anomaly Fee" for every non-terrestrial scent. The ayys are literally working "post-mortem overtime" just to afford the oxygen in a place that wants them dead.

The No-Moon Clause: Why not land on the Moon? Simple: The Moon has no atmosphere to hide their debt. In Antarctica, the snowstorms act as a "tax haven" from orbital telescopes. They are cosmic tax evaders living in a dumpster because the "Moon Rent" is too high for their bankrupt civilization.

Summary: They aren't mysterious explorers; they're intergalactic hobos caught in a legal battle with penguins. They're stuck in a loop of paying "Post-Mortem Taxes" with money they don't have, in a place with zero resources.

Teacher's Grading Rubric: "The Cosmic Egg Fanfic" Sun 22 Feb 2026 03:25:50

No.42008275 Report

Teacher's Grading Rubric: The "Cosmic Egg" Fanfic (D-)

Class, let's grade this "confidential" transcript. It's a textbook example of a student failing to emulate a government document. Here is the red-pen correction:

The "Podcaster" Error: Listing a Sennheiser MKH 415 microphone at the top is a dead giveaway. Government interrogators care about Case Numbers and clearance levels, not the "warmth" of the audio for a SoundCloud-tier production. This was written by a gear-head, not an agent.

Formatting Failure: Real TS/SCI documents use rigid headers (ORCON, NOFORN) and standardized fonts. This uses a generic serif font and theater-script spacing. If you want to trick a skeptic, at least buy a red "TOP SECRET" rubber stamp.

Narrative Bingo: The "NH103" entity sounds like a philosophy student who just discovered Atlantis (renamed "Antlan" for edge) and Sumerian Cuneiform. Why do "leaked" aliens always talk like 19th-century occultists? Real intel reports focus on propulsion and biology, not lectures on "symbolism in nature."

The "Alef" Trope: Using "Alef" (the first Hebrew letter) for God is the most overused trope in "spiritual" sci-fi. It lacks the "otherness" required for a convincing hoax. It's too human-centric—a projection of the author's own interests.

Final Grade: 2/10

Teacher's Note: "Please see me after class. The 'Cosmic Egg' monologue makes the alien sound like it's selling a self-help book. Between the 2026 gas prices and this fiscal/linguistic mess, the 'aliens' would probably just stay home to avoid the embarrassment."

The letter G is the 7th letter 6 7=6G.

Why make people say and type 6G? Was it to integrate people to the 6G network or are we summoning 6G by thinking and typing it?

The image displays a stylized emblem with a prominent letter "G" in the center, surrounded by a set of golden-yellow tools that resemble a compass. The tools are arranged in a way that suggests they are pointing towards the letter "G." The background of the emblem is a solid green color, providing a stark contrast to the golden-yellow of the tools. The emblem is set against a plain, solid green background, which does not distract from the central design. The style of the image is graphic and symbolic, commonly associated with masonic symbolism.

Who or what is BOB? Anonymous Sat 21 Feb 2026 19:52:31 No.42006719

There's this phenomenon of various characters, people, things, etc being named Bob, B.O.B. Bob Dob, and other variations of this name. All these things somehow relate back to the paranormal, with almost always a nefarious supernatural force being involved.

https://villains.fandom.com/wiki/Killer_BOB

The Church of the Subgenius - aka the boomer cult that created the Illuminati! TCG - speaks of "Bob" as "is the greatest salesman ever lived, cheating death a number of times" and creator of some strange force called "Slack"... then there is BOB from Twin Peaks is characterized as "an inter-dimensional entity who feeds on pain and sorrow" which also is a force with a name of it's own "garmonbozia"

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/J._R._%22Bob%22_Dobbs

Del the Funky Homosapien has the song "Mr Dobalina (BOB Dobalina)" and often talks about 'his brother George'. Prince apparently was going to release a "Black Album" during the early 90s, in which he presents an alter ego "Bob George" that sings/raps about shooting women and all kinds of other crazy shit...however, he had a "religious epiphany" and felt that the album was evil, so never released it officially.

>This video talks about all this and "BOB George":

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=oBPCLw66BHo>

Speaking of 'George' how can anyone forget or "Georgie" and the Clown from IT, whom is named Robert "Bob" Gray...

On the topic of clowns and BOBs, ever heard of Bob Bell? how about his alter-ego, Bozo the clown? Probably just a coincidence, but the image for Bob Dobbs comes from the Bell Telephone company..

The connections get crazier as you dig; just look into other Bobs like 'Robert' and 'Evil Bob' from Runescape and Dresden Files.. or the infamous 'Creepy Bob' pastas.. etc etc

Def share any other BOB info and theories.

Ethically sourced “spare” human bodies could revolutionize medicine

Human “bodyoids” could reduce animal testing, improve drug development, and alleviate organ shortages.

Illustrated collage of an anatomical figure, surrounded by an abstract pattern of body parts and numerical scribbles.

Aïda Amer/MIT Technology Review | Photos National Library Medicine

Why do we hear about medical breakthroughs in mice, but rarely see them translate into cures for human disease? Why do so few drugs that enter clinical trials receive regulatory approval? And why is the waiting list for organ transplantation so long? These challenges stem in large part from a common root cause: a severe shortage of ethically sourced human bodies.

It may be disturbing to characterize human bodies in such commodifying terms, but the unavoidable reality is that human biological materials are an essential commodity in medicine, and persistent shortages of these materials create a major bottleneck to progress.

This imbalance between supply and demand is the underlying cause of the organ shortage crisis, with more than 100,000 patients currently waiting for a solid organ transplant in the US alone. It also forces us to rely heavily on animals in medical research, a practice that can't replicate major aspects of human physiology and makes it necessary to inflict harm on sentient creatures. In addition, the safety and efficacy of any experimental drug must still be confirmed in clinical trials on living human bodies. These costly trials risk harm to patients, can take a decade or longer to complete, and make it through to approval less than 15% of the time.

There might be a way to get out of this moral and scientific deadlock. Recent advances in biotechnology now provide a pathway to producing living human bodies without the neural components that allow us to think, be aware, or feel pain. Many will find this possibility disturbing, but if researchers and policymakers can find a way to pull these technologies together, we may one day be able to create "spare" bodies, both human and nonhuman.

These could revolutionize medical research and drug development, greatly reducing the need for animal testing, rescuing many people from organ transplant lists, and allowing us to produce more effective drugs and treatments. All without crossing most people's ethical lines.

Bringing technologies together

Although it may seem like science fiction, recent technological progress has pushed this concept into the realm of plausibility. Pluripotent stem cells, one of the earliest cell types to form during development, can give rise to every type of cell in the adult body.

Recently, researchers have used these stem cells to create structures that seem to mimic the early development of actual human embryos. At the same time, artificial uterus technology is rapidly advancing, and other pathways may be opening to allow for the development of fetuses outside of the body.

Such technologies, together with established genetic techniques to inhibit brain development, make it possible to envision the creation of "bodyoids"—a potentially unlimited source of human bodies, developed entirely outside of a human body from stem cells, that lack sentience or the ability to feel pain.

There are still many technical roadblocks to achieving this vision, but we have reason to expect that bodyoids could radically transform biomedical research by addressing critical limitations in the current models of research, drug development, and medicine. Among many other benefits, they would offer an almost unlimited source of organs, tissues, and cells for use in transplantation.

It could even be possible to generate organs directly from a patient's own cells, essentially cloning someone's biological material to ensure that transplanted tissues are a perfect immunological match and thus eliminating the need for lifelong immunosuppression. Bodyoids developed from a patient's cells could also allow for personalized screening of drugs, allowing physicians to directly assess the effect of different interventions in a biological model that accurately reflects a patient's own personal genetics and physiology. We can even envision using animal bodyoids in agriculture, as a substitute for the use of sentient animal species.

Of course, exciting possibilities are not certainties. We do not know whether the embryo models recently created from stem cells could give rise to living people or, thus far, even to living mice. We do not know when, or whether, an effective technique will be found for successfully gestating human bodies entirely outside a person. We cannot be sure whether such bodyoids can survive without ever having developed brains or the parts of brains associated with consciousness, or whether they would still serve as accurate models for living people without those brain functions.

Even if it all works, it may not be practical or economical to "grow" bodyoids, possibly for many years, until they can be mature enough to be useful for our ends. Each of these questions will require substantial research and time. But we believe this idea is now plausible enough to justify discussing both the technical feasibility and the ethical implications.

Ethical considerations and societal implications

Bodyoids could address many ethical problems in modern medicine, offering ways to avoid unnecessary pain and suffering. For example, they could offer an ethical alternative to the way we currently use nonhuman animals for research and food, providing meat or other products with no animal suffering or awareness.

But when we come to human bodyoids, the issues become harder. Many will find the concept grotesque or appalling. And for good reason. We have an innate respect for human life in all its forms. We do not allow broad research on people who no longer have consciousness or, in some cases, never had it.

At the same time, we know much can be gained from studying the human body. We learn much from the bodies of the dead, which these days are used for teaching and research only with consent. In laboratories, we study cells and tissues that were taken, with consent, from the bodies of the dead and the living.

Recently we have even begun using for experiments the "animated cadavers" of people who have been declared legally dead, who have lost all brain function but whose other organs continue to function with mechanical assistance. Genetically modified pig kidneys have been connected to, or transplanted into, these legally dead but physiologically active cadavers to help researchers determine whether they would work in living people.

In all these cases, nothing was, legally, a living human being at the time it was used for research. Human bodyoids would also fall into that category. But there are still a number of issues worth considering. The first is consent: The cells used to make bodyoids would have to come from someone, and we'd have to make sure that this someone consented to this particular, likely controversial, use. But perhaps the deepest issue is that bodyoids might diminish the human status of real people who lack consciousness or sentience.

Thus far, we have held to a standard that requires us to treat all humans born alive as people, entitled to life and respect. Would bodyoids—created without pregnancy, parental hopes, or indeed parents—blur that line? Or would we consider a bodyoid a human being, entitled to the same respect? If so, why—just because it looks like us? A sufficiently detailed mannequin can meet that test. Because it looks like us and is alive? Because it is alive and has our DNA? These are questions that will require careful thought.

A call to action

Until recently, the idea of making something like a bodyoid would have been relegated to the realms of science fiction and philosophical speculation. But now it is at least plausible—and possibly revolutionary. It is time for it to be explored.

The potential benefits—for both human patients and sentient animal species—are great. Governments, companies, and private foundations should start thinking about bodyoids as a possible path for investment. There is no need to start with humans—we can begin exploring the feasibility of this approach with rodents or other research animals.

As we proceed, the ethical and social issues are at least as important as the scientific ones. Just because something can be done does not mean it should be done. Even if it looks possible, determining whether we should make bodyoids, nonhuman or human, will require considerable thought, discussion, and debate. Some of that will be by scientists, ethicists, and others with special interest or knowledge. But ultimately, the decisions will be made by societies and governments.

The time to start those discussions is now, when a scientific pathway seems clear enough for us to avoid pure speculation but before the world is presented with a troubling surprise. The announcement of the birth of Dolly the cloned sheep back in the 1990s launched a hysterical reaction, complete with speculation about armies of cloned warrior slaves. Good decisions require more preparation.

The path toward realizing the potential of bodyoids will not be without challenges; indeed, it may never be possible to get there, or even if it is possible, the path may never be taken. Caution is warranted, but so is bold vision; the opportunity is too important to ignore.
